WORLD RECORD DAM TO BE CONSTRUCTED NEAR PACIFIC COAST

Structure to Be Three Miles Long, 190 Feet High and Will Cost a Quarter Billion Dollars

Project Involves Building Modern City, Irrigation of Desert and Holding Back Columbia River

SEATTLE, Wash., Jan. 15 (Special Correspondence) — Construction will begin shortly on what is destined to be one of the greatest industrial proj ects of the New World, involving as It does the damming of the Columbia River, the building of a large modern city, the irrigating of a desert, and the creation of the biggest hydroelec-tric power plant in this country, west of Niagara Falls.

of Niagara Falls.

The scene of this development is Priest Rapids, near the middle of Washington State, equidistant from Seattle and Spokane. The project is being put through by the Washington Irrigation and Development Company, a subsidiary of the General Electric Company, of which Henry J. Pierce of New York is president.

A quarter-billion dollars is the estimated cost, of which $28,000,000 will be spent on the dam alone. This, it is reported, will be the largest power dam in the world, 90 feet high, and three miles long. The water backed up behind it will make a lake 10 miles long by four miles wide. Except during high water, in the spring and summer months. 400.000 horsetowers will be months, 400,000 horsepower will be developed; during high water, 300,000 horsepower additional is expected.

The plan is to make Priest Rapids the western center for the electro-themical industries. At present these industries are centered at Niagara Falls. The new plants and factories will supply General Electric products, not only to the west, but they expect to have all Asia for their market as well.

Of vital, though secondary importance, is the irrigation system which will reclaim 70,000 acres of sagebrush desert now owned by the company. This land is covered 100 feet deep with volcanic ash, and needs only water to make it as fertile as that in the Imperial Valley, which it much resembles. At present it is barren and treeless, with no vegetation but sagebrush, and that only two or three feet high. The climate is hot. The sun shines 320 days in the year. There is very little rain. During the winter, which lasts only a month and a half, the temperature sometimes gets down to zero, and oace in a while Of vital, though secondary imporgets down to zero, and once in a while there is half an inch of snow. Spring comes in February. During the summer the temperature runs up to 120 degrees; in October this year it ran up to 96 degrees. All this, too, is much like the Imperial Valley.

Irrigation, which will be done by means of pipes laid under ground, will make it possible to raise any kind of crops—alfalfa, corn and cotton. By covering the ground with green crops and by creating a large body of water the climate will be somewhat modified it is thought Typical of the modern ideas which are being worked out in every line of activity is the way in which geography is to be taught in the schools there. Instead of textbooks and maps, studied in a classroom, the pupils will be taken out of doors to a 10-acre field where, modeled in relief and colored appropriately, they will find a huge map of the world, on which they can actually move from place to place.

Successful publicity work of the league, co-operation of the lumber companies in their reforestation service, and the acquisition of several large tracts through the beneficence of individuals, are taken as evidence that the league is succeeding in its efforts to preserve representative efforts to preserve representative virgin stands of the redwood. Most important of these acquisi-

Substantial funds of $20,000 and upward stantial funds of $20,000 and upware have been subscribed by residents in Illinois, Massachusetts and other distant states. These giant trees, surpassed only by the big trees of the Sierra, are winning tardy recognition from tourist and traveler. Says the Redwood League report:

During the summer season it was reported that by train and automobile over 1900 people a day came into Eureka, most of them drawn by the lure of the redwoods.

The effect of this travel upon the counties concerned, particularly Sonoma, Mendocino, Humboldt and Del Norte counties, is decidedly beneficial from the economic standpoint, and the people and the officials of these counties realize the value of the redwoods as an reconomic asset in attracting ever increasing numbers of people. This realization of the future will be one of the most potent forces working for the preservation of the redwoods.

Expansion of the air mail service to provide through service from coast to coast and extension to New England is advocated in a letter which Howard Coonley, president of the Boston Chamber of Commerce, has just sent to the Massachusetts Senators and Representatives at Washington.

Making a genuine service out of the air mail routes by providing for night fiving is the design in this movement. Mr. Coonley's letter follows a recommendation of the committee on post office and postal facilities of the Cham-

FACTS REGARDING REICH RAILROADS

Before Special Committee-Dr. Schacht to Appear

By SISLEY HUDDLESTON By Special Cable

PARIS, Jan. 19-Frequently it has seen proposed that the German railroads should be used as payment for reparations, and either sold or leased to the industrialists and the proceeds handed to the Allies or made the pledge of a large loan. It is evidently with the view of considering the real value of the railroads and how they can be utilized, either for reparations purposes or for the stabilization of German currency, that the experts committee has asked several famous railroad experts to give evidence be-

Sir William Acworth, a poted British authority on international railroad matters, and M. Leverve, secretary of the Union of European Railroads, will attend. The German railroads show a deficit, but in a country like Germany, with its large population and great industrial activity, the railfoads, properly administered, should be an important source of revenue. That is why the German industrialists, in spite of the deficit, have often tried to obtain a cession of the railways making this a condition of participa ion in internal loans.

Seeking Remedies for Situation The committee therefore is turning its attention to: one, the reasons of the deficit; two, the measures to remedy the defects in the present sysem: three, whether it would be advantageous for the finances of the Reich that the German railways should be conceded to private industries; four whether their exploitation by a mixed organization is not desirable, in which there will be German and allied

Bootleggers, booze, lax enforcement by the officials, insufficient penalties in the courts—all of these phases of the problem will come in for positive consideration.

But, on the other hand, the achievements of prohibition will be dis-stressed; the closed "cures" for alcohol-ics, decreased liquor arrests for forcement. cussed; the closed "cures" for alconolics, decreased liquor arrests for drunkenness and for crimes traceable to drink; increased savings among working people; the effects of prohibition in the schools and in the home life of families formerly handicapped by the existence of the liquor traffic. It will be pointed out that the remarkable strides which prohibition has made places an even greater re-

ART At Doll & Richards

There are three exhibitions of grea bury Street. The olls by Theodore Coe. shown in the large gallery, reveal brush that has emancipated itself from brush that has emancipated itself from every rule except that of freedom and spontaneity. It runs chromatically over the canvas, sweeping across broad plains, over hills, and through-wind-beaten trees. The artist reacts to nature passionately, carried away by the force of the elements, by the infinite expansiveness of space and the life struggle of plants and trees. He paints with gusto, without losing a feeling for essentials, such as solidity and form. His use of color is arbitrary; purely a matter of personal taste. Has he a right to this much freedom? Is he a shoddy craftsman, or does nature reach him in such ruggedness and with so little finesse? Such painting will exhilarate, those who have a taste for it. Persons who can rise above its technical aberrations will find much force and virility beneath its disorderly surface.

Water colors by Jean Jacques Haffner are also being shown. The artist has done some excellent sketches of New York City with the massive architecture and crowded thoroughfares, and also nocturnes scintillated with electric every rule except that of freedom and has done some excellent sketches of New York City with the massive architecture and crowded thoroughfares, and also nocturnes scintillated with electric lights. The European water colors are all done with thin washes, luminous, colorful and atmospheric. The "Lasalle in the Cevenes" pictures make a fine group of landscapes.

The etchings by Ralph M. Pearson are varied in subject and approach. There are several done in New Mexico of the Indian pueblo, with very fine line and careful drawing. Others try to express the age of industry, such as "Structural Iron" and "The Asphalterss" done in a sketchier manner. Still another group carries into the realm of abstract form: "Mountains at Liano" and "Cypress Grove, Monterey." Mr. Pearson has experimented in the latter place with the organic and geometric form that has already made a definite entrée into painting. "Winter in Jackson Park" is one of his finest plates. It is done with but few lines, which succeed in establishing form and giving a definitely cold and wintry atmosphere. There are also, shown several entertaining bookplates by the artist. classes at Harvard, is a satire of middleclasses at Harvard, is a satire of middle-class morality, in a Pennsylvania manu-facturing town. Mr. Leven has done ex-cellently with its construction and his audience rewards him with hearty and frequent laughter. The comic he cer-tainly has handled with skill; the pa-thetic he finds more difficult, it some-times almost runs away with him, and yet it is an awkward pathos. for it seems to have no sufficient thought standing behind it and strengthening it, or even showing it its place in a word of satire.

or even showing it its place in a wor.iof satire.

The Actopel family presents a sorry case of ambition without ideals. The father slaves 30 years to become head bookkeeper at the Crane foundry; the mother is his mate in ineffectualness; the daughter-in-law, a conventional optimist; one son, an ignorant egoist who practices dominating meny after 12 lessons by mail; the other, a student so eager to gain the economic results of high honors that he cheats in examination. There is also a daughterlovely, lazy, selfish and endowed with undone: the father breaks down, one son loses his job, the other is expelled from college. Heaven helps them through the weakness of the daughter, and they are not unwilling to accept that assistance.

This is a bitter plot. Yes. Yet it offers opportunities for true words and dramatic conflicts. It puts the two sons at daggers' heads and nothing in the play is more realistic or more comic than their altercations; not the Oxford ne'er-do-well's reception in the Actopel living room nor his father's subsequent righteous indignation.

Decidedly the best piece of acting is done by Mr. Goodnow as Mr. Actopel, for he makes a living man of him, but the others do very well, especially Miss James as the dangerous daughter and Mr. Howard as Raleigh Crane IV. Indeed, the entire production is far above reserved.

deed, the entire production is far above amateur level, the action going of at an excellent speed, the scenery and amateur level, the action going off at an excellent speed, the scenery and lighting being so fitting and satisfac-tory as never to obtrude. The perform-ance last night, the first open to the public, was given for the benefit of the Workshop and the MacDowell Colony in Peterborough, N. H. It was very well attended.

WAR'S LOAD DIVIDED AND-ITS GRAFT CUT BY NEW HOUSE BILL

as his or her part in the war instead of giving practically nothing or even gaining friancially from the war. I suggested it as a most excellent plan for putting an end to wars.

Since the suggestion went to the printer, Capt. Bruce Q. Nabers sent me a newspaper editorial that pre-sents the same plan but developed to its logical extent. (Of course to lie logical extent. (Of course neither that editorial nor mine was written with any knowledge of the other.) My plan was only the first step in the right direction; theirs is, in its entirety and sound sense, a plan that demands the most careful consideration of every American and of every other citizen of a civillized nation.

We may not be Christian Scientists, but most people familiar with the newspaper field will admit without hesitation that, from a strictly newspaper point of view. The Christian Science Monitor is the best newspaper, not only in this country, but in the world. Captain Nabers writes: "The response has been so general from prime ministers, congressmen, publishers; and just ordinary people that I knew you would be interested." I am. To me it looks like the only sure answer to the life and death question that confronts the world.

At an earlier Camp-Fire I passed on to you the suggestion for ending war advanced by ex-Vice-President Fairbanks. It was, in effect, that no nation should go to war except by the definite vote of the people themselves. It is a good plan. It could even be used in addition to the Monitor plan. But the Monitor plan is better, for it would shape the will of the people toward peace and that will would find means to express and enforce itself. The Co-operating Council of the American Peace Award expects that its jury of award will have made its selection of the winning peace plan by Jan. 1, so that by the time you read this you will probably know what plan they have selected to be voted on by the people. Their plant unfortunately, is for their own Jury to do the selecting and then merely allow the people to vote yes or nor on that plan. The people are allowed ho At an earlier Camp-Fire I passed on allow the people to vote yes or nor or that plan. The people are allowed ho chance to choose among other plans submitted, no chance to express pref-rence or judgment among them.

Bok Referendum

The members of the jury of award are well chosen and command respect, but there are only seven of them. It but there are only seven of them. It is rather ludicrous, as well as undemocratic, illogical and inefficient, that the real voting for the best peace plain for a whole nation to adopt is done by—seven individuals, and it is made even more ludicrous by the broad gesture of asking the people to "vote."

If the people vote no on the one plan selected by the jury, the whole attempt of the peace award comes to nothing, if the people vote yes on that one plan, it is merely the verdict of the people on one single plan and therefore an entirely inconclusive verdict of the people on the general question of which of all the plans the world is now able to submit is the best plan or the plan with best chance of adoption. And it is to be tramembered that only the people as a whole can render soundly effective my plan whatever.

If is to be regretted that so spiena shole can render soundly effective my plan whatever.

It is to be regretted that so splendid an idea as that of the American Peace Award should be robbed of so much of its significance and effectiveness by mishandling, but, even mutilated as it is, it is a big step in the right direction and merits the American people's participation to the slight extent to which they are permitted to participate.

Peace Plan Ballot Urged

Whatever the plan chosen by the seven, by all means take pains to cast your yes or no vote. At least we can thus get a definite verdict on one plan that is sure to be good even if not the best. But if this Monitor plan seems as good to you as it does to me, and if a plan to the same general purpose or one that seems to you better is not the one submitted for your yes or no vote, why not write a separate letter.

vote, why not write a separate letter to the American Peace Award, 342 Madison Avenue, New York City, stating your views briefly and con-cisely? Ballots are to be printed in ountry, which may mean a further imitation on a nation-wide and conlimitation on a nation-wide and con-clusive verdict, but do your best to get a ballot and send it in.

The voting, of course, may be a thing of the past by the time you read this, but such matters as arriv-ing at a decision in a case of this kind often take longer than expected. In any case this Monitor plan de-serves to be broadcast as much as possible.

Entire co-operation in his program of economy which will cut not less than $9,000,000 from the departmental estimates in the budget of expenditures for mates in the budget of expenditures for 1924 has been promised Gov. Channing H. Cox by the different commissioners with whom he has consulted. This statement the Governor made last night in reply to a published statement that certain department heads in the state service were planning to carry grievances to the Legislature and seek to override the Governor in his budget estimates.

In part, the Governor said: "Most of the department heads were consulted, before the budget was submitted, and

Story-Book World Personified by Children in Operetta

Children in Operetta

Light as a summer breeze Peter Pan danced, the Three Fiddlers played merrily, Mother Goose's gander and Mother Hubbard's dog frolicked together like the good friends that they are, Old King Cole sat on his throne, and all the people of the story-book world gathered around on the stage at the Theodore Roosevelt Intermediate School in Roxbury yesterday, and there in the midst stood "John" and "Jane," strangely like Francis and Cella of the classroom, charged with having no faith in these folk from the World of Romance.

On the shadowed side of the footlights were gathered all the children of the school, all but as many as there were people on the stage, which they watched with absorbed and breathless interest, half lest in the illusion of Interest, half lest in the illusion of the play, half puzzled that Mother Goose should have the face of Dorothy, that the Sleeping Beauty should look so like Madeline, Simple Simon like Ezra grown uncommonly tall and slim, and Robin Hood like Roland. Could Mother Hubbard's dog and Mother Goose's goose be just Lawrence and Elsie, as they had been told? And could Peter Pan be the Frances of Both believing and doubting, the dual performance seemed of double charm to the children, half real, half play. That Hanley, and Henry and Nathan, and Norman, Beatrice, Sarah, Anna, Elizabeth and Mary of the every-day history, English and mathematics classes should suddenly have become a king or some other noted personage of the half-real realm of fancy was too involved a problem to be solved before the kaleidoscopic mystery of color, costume, song and dance on the stage before them. They gave themselves wholly to the joy of the moment and when the crimson yelver curtain velled the merry picture the hall resounded with a clapping and a shouting that seemed to an onlooker to make the statues of Roosevelt and Lincoln that guarded either side of the proscenium, smile.

Miss Myrtle A. Bacon, who has charge of the music in the school, says that since the operetta has been in re-hearsal the children have made mu-sical strides such as were unknown before. Herbert L. Morse, master, de-clares that it has given impetus to all the work of the school.

Each district chief has been instructed to have each company in his district begin with a single group off duty 24 hours on Feb. 1, other groups to follow in rotation. The chiefs were also told in rotation. The chiefs were also told to avoid, if possible, having a captain off duty 24 hours on the same day as the district chief. The groups on night and day duty will alternate their shifts so that no group will remain for a great length of time on the same hours. With the shift to the double platoon plan, 210 new men will be taken on by the fire department, bringing the total personnel up to 1453.

POPULAR SUPPORT OF MUSEUM URGED

President of Fine Arts Institution Pleads for Larger Interest of Citizens

Art as a civic asset is made the basis His Fiddlers There of an appeal by Morris Gray, president of the Boston Museum of Pine Arts, for a more general support of that institution on the part of the citizens. Mr. Gray's plea appears in his annual report to the trustees, made public today. In it he says:

It does not seem too much to ask, that citizens who are proud of their city should recognize the civic value of a great museum of art and should contribute to its needs, even if—to their misortune—they take personally no interest in arts.

and the amount of regular subscriptions to the Museum of Fine Arts has increased greatly in recent years, the president says, these subscriptions even now pay only about one-quarter of the running expenses of the museum, which, in the absence of any state or cfty. "is assistance from State or city, assistance from State or city, "is dependent not only for its mainte-nance, but for its greater service, on the continuing and increasing gen-erosity of citizens, expressed in gifts and bequests."

Mr. Gray and Arthur Fairbanks, director, stress the feature of instruction, making known that 392 students, an increase of 38 over 1922, attended the art seasool, and that 6778 visitors were recorded, asking for guidance in the galleries. In addition, Director Fairbanks says in his report, 3168 grammar and high school pupils of Boston and vicinity visited the museum in classes without asking for special guidance.

The establishment of the Caroline Summer Freeman Fund has placed the summer story-telling feature on a permanent basis, and in the past year more than 7000 boys and girls were brought to the museum in 128 groups from playgrounds, libraries, and settlements. From a standpoint of art, the chief value in welfare work of this sort, lies in the fact that each of the stories told the children has outside the study room.

In the reports of the president and director are acknowledged numerous graved gems, specimens of Egyptian sculpture, French, Chinese and Japanese porcelain, Indian paintings and reliefs, rare fabrics from Persia, Italy and Mexico, ancient English silver and American furniture.

BOSTON AUTHORS HONOR POET POE

Unveil Tablet Close to His Birthplace at Broadway and Carver Street

At the meeting of the Boston Authors' Club, held yesterday afternoon in the club rooms, 8 Newbury Street, the literary exercises in comemoration of the anniversary of the birth of Edgar Allan Poe, pointed to a satisfying factor in the arrangement of such programs, namely, that there of legislation pending in Massachuis an apparently inexhaustible sup-ply of fresh and stimulating incidents waiting to reward research. Many books have been written, from many viewpoints, on the career of Edgar Allan Poe, but that their authors have not in any wise succeeded in drain-ing all the sources of information was found especially true in the papers read yesterday. Several speakers on the formal program presented in-cidents concerning Poe which pre-viously had eluded biographers, and gave a number of hitherto unknown facts which had intimate bearing on the career of Poe in the various garbs of humor and pathetic detail.

As is always true with discussion of any public figure, reports about any single incident are likely to con-flict mysteriously. In The Christian Science Monitor yesterday it was, stated that David and Elizabeth Arnold Poe "were strolling Irish players." The phrase is the phrase of an accredited biographer and refers to the company with which the Poes were associated rather than to the individuals; since Elizabeth Poe was an dividuals; since Elizabeth Poe was an Englishwoman of a well known theatrical family and David Poe was of an old Maryland family. The major address of the afternoon The major address of the afternoon was made by Joseph E. Chamberlin, who took for his general subject "Poe and Boston." Poe returned to Boston in the 40's, to lecture at the old Boston Lyceum. At that time the newspapers were considered to have treated him exceedingly churlishly, a fact over which Poe hypoded, and fact over which Poe brooded, and which has been mentioned only obscurely in some quarters since But it remained for Mr. Chamberlin to seek out the actual circum-stances of the matter which he presented as an important contribution to the fund of information concerning the poet's association with Boston.

Shorter addresses were made other members of the club. Caroline Ticknor, whose book on "Poe and Mrs. Whitman" is well known, spoke of some incidents she had gathered together in the course of her research for book material and which, for politic reasons, she had been com-pelled to withhold from the final manuscript of the book.

Mrs. Harriet Lothrop gave an appreciation of Poe. Dr. Harry L. Registered at The Christian Koopman, librarian of the John Hay Library at Brown University, read an original poem on Poe. Miss Amy Bridgeman read an unpublished poem. written by a British army officer, about the poet. The speakers were introduced by F. W. C. Hersey, the chairman, who interpolated, briefly, some results of his considerable study on the subject. At the conclusion of program E. Howard Gay read

This afternoon the club will unveil the tablet, close to his birthplace, at the intersection of Broadway and Carver Street; designated Edgar Allen Poe Square by the city, which according to the sign ignores the fact that the middle name should be spelled "Allan" instead of "Allen."

SALEM ANTIQUES TO BE EXHIBITED

Communion Service and Books Taken From Vaults

SALEM, Mass., Jan. 19 (Special)-An interesting exhibition of antiques of historic value will be held in the First Unitarian Church in this city tomorrow and Monday when the silver communion service, used more than 200 years ago in church services, together with a large number of aged volumes in which are recorded church and town events of Salem dating back nearly 300 years, will be placed on public view from 12:30 to 3 p. m. on Sudday and from 10 a. m. to 4 p. m.

on Monday.

It is the first time in years that these treasures have been taken from the vaults of the local bank where they have been stored, and probably will be the last time until the celebra-tion of the three hundredth anniversary of Salem, which occurs in 1926. Historical societies from Plymouth and Portsmouth, N. H., have accepted invitations to visit the exhibition

MILLO CAVE YIELDS ANCIENT POTTERY

Widely Separate Periods of Time Are Indicated by Shards Discovered in Cave

[This is the eighth article on "The City of David" by Prof. R. A. S. Macalister to be reprinted here from the Daily Telegraph of London. Others were published in The Christian Science Monitor on Nov. 16, 21, 30, Det. 7, 20, 22, and 28.]

The work has been interrupted by heavy rains. Our old pits, including the remains of Millo, are once more filled in, and in the new pit since opened nothing of special importance has as yet been found.

Some particulars may, however, be given about the pottery which was discovered in the neighborhood of the early Jebusite wall, which justified us in dating the wall to the early period to which we assign it. The ware was in two series—an older, ware was in two series—an older, coarser, hand-made ware, and a later, wheel-made. The jar handle which has already been reported, bearing impressions of an Egyptian scarab, belonged to the latter series; and in the same level was found a fragment of a stamnos (a well-known and graceful form of vessel) of what used to be called Mycenæan ware, though "late Minoan" is the term now preferred. Minoan" is the term now preferred.

The surface of the older ware is rarely quite uniform in hue, owing to irregularity of firing. The later ware is of a light brownish tint, tending to burnt sienna, and is smooth-faced. The older ware is coarsely modeled, and as a wale is rether thick eabout half as rule is rather thick—about half an inch in section.

Ornament is distinctly rare—much rarer than in contemporary pottery in mounds that have been excavated nearer the coast.

The shapes consist of: (1) Flat-bottomed, egg-shaped vessels, with round mouths and slightly molded lips; (2) similar vessels, with everted mouths; (3) similar vessels, with what are known as ledge handles—short, fat projections, resembling shelves, one on each side; (4) jugs with loop handles. These loops are more circular in outline than the loops of contemporary pottery found hearer the coast. Pottery experts who have examined these shards assign to them a date not later than 2000 B.C. date not later than 2000 B. C.

One of the most remarkable sources of this early pottery was a cave just outside the older Jebusite wall, im-mediately north of Rockscarp B. An oval opening in the rock floor, which when first uncovered was stopped by three large stones, gave admission to the cave, which was 15 feet deep. Foothollows cut in the rock wall facilitated descent from the roof hole just described, but there had also been au entrance in the brow of the rock-scarp, which was closed with rude masonry. The cave measured 8 feet by 5 feet. In its floor was a pair of holes, side by side, which admitted to a small lower chamber.

The cave was entirely natural! The lower chamber was completely filled with stiff yellow silt, containing no antiquities. At its bottom we found the mouth of a narrow tunnel, run-ning northward; this also was choked with silt, and as it promised no archæ-ological results we felt that it would not be worth the enormous labor of clearing it. But we had the impres-sion that this tunnel had served as a water-channel and that at some time it had carried water from a spring to

The upper cave was filled with a stiff black earth containing many shards of the ancient type above described. Through this black earth there ran a shaft of white earth, with more recent pottery—evidently at some much later time this shaft had been dug, perhaps by treasure-

At the bottom of the cave, and just inside the opening leading to the lower one, were found shards of a veswhich, if it had been complete should not have hesitated to describe as the finest early Canaanite vessel yet found in Palestine. It was a large four-handled jar, enriched with elaborate geometrical ornament, in dark Indian red. No shards of the lower portion below the handles were found. Probably the jar had been brought into the cave to be filled with water; its upper part had been broken by some accident, but the lower part re-mained intact, and was carried away by the disconsolate owner. The fragments of the mouth were not dis-

in Bengal is the increasing demand for technical training, as against the purely literary training which has in the past so prevailed in India. More students, in fact, are turning to technical, medical and industrial study. No profession is more overcrowded in Bengal than law, yet even here there has been a diminution during the quinquennium from 2912 to 2439.

But while it must be admitted that the latter figure is far higher than is economically justifiable, the activity recorded by the technical colleges is a good sign, and one which must gladden the heart of Bhupendranath Basu, the new Vice-Chancellor of Calcutta University. He, the unofficial as opposed to the ministerial head of education in Bengal, has never ceased to preach the practical merits of vocational education, compared with the more clerical and literary type of learning which has prevailed in India. Since the time of Macaulay, and of which today Sir Asutosh Mukherjee, late Vice-Chancellor of Calcutta University, is the most eloquent exponent.

"If that bed doesn't blossom soon," said the head gardener, "I'll have to bring something from the greenhouse. The queen can't bear to see a single dull bed."

"There's pansies planted there," said a little page. "If it rains to-night, they'll be up in the morning." It did rain, that night and in the It did rain that night and in the morning the garden plot was covered with soft, quiet, purple and shaded pansies. They were shy and rather frightened to think they had blossomed in such a grand garden as the king's.

"We're out of place," wailed one.

"Oh, what can we do?" they sighed.
"We can smile," said a blue pansy.
So the pansies smiled and smiled.

The Ruralist and His Problems

NCE upon a time in a far country, there was the most beautiful garden in the world. It was the king's garden and, because it was the king's garden, there was a high stone wall around it, so that the folk in the streets could not stare at the ladies and gentlemen of the court. It was a most beautiful garden. The flowers grew large and bright another, her bottle of perfume. "Oh, la! how dull the garden fooks and the beds always looked spick and this morning," said the queen fretladies and gentlemen of the court.

It was a most beautiful garden.
The flowers grew large and bright and the beds always looked spick and span, for there were 10 gardeners and 10 pages to tend them and to water and weed and spade them. Tall, purple iris and lilies grew by the wall and the beds were bright with larkspur, The pansies in the pansy bed were still smiling and they began to curtsey to the queen's feet. At last' she glanced down, saw the quiet little flowers and said: "Gracious! What flowers and said: "Gracious! What is the use of a flower, unless it is brightly-colored or smells aweetly?" She looked directly at the pansies, so they knew she meant them, but they went on smiling bravely—except one small white one with blue eyes, who egan to weep.

Then by-and-by, after the queen egan looked for a long time at the hun-dreds of little pansies smiling at her, she began to crinkle up her eyes, and lo and behold! the queen was smiling,

Just then the king came walking along the garden path and, when he saw the queen, he bowed low and said: "My love among the flowers saw i

"We're out of place," wailed one.

"We aren't bright enough. Oh dear!" said another, looking in dismay at her beautiful brown skirts.

"Bits."

The queen stooped quickly and picked the white pansy, with a tear still on its cheek. And she fastened it in the gold lace of the king's collar. The pansy beamed and the king and queen joined hands and danced round the pansy bed, from pure joy. "How extraordinary!" exclaimed the State develop a super water power system, or control its development, to safeguard the interests of New Hampshire people in the power from their native streams. The farmers are alarmed and indigmant at the exploitation of power by great companies, some of them from outside the State, for selfish interests. In another decade, more or less, electricity will revolutionize agricultural operations, and change the whole face of the farm labor problem, their national leader told them this week; but their interest in this big problem had previously been brought home to them. They are asking for a new constitutional convention to amend the Constitution so that tax equalization can be realized. To be sure, it is the burden on the farmer they are looking at; but it is interesting to see these Republican farmers moving their forces against the same interests that the Democratic Mayor of Boston, in an industrial State a few hundred miles south, is also attacking. The New Hampshire farm bureau has evidently developed an amazing political strength in its half dozen years as a state organization. The farmer delegates are confident that in their next legislative campaign they will succeed where they falled last time, and that they will secure relief for overburdened small towns and conservation of the State's natural resources. THE export end of the automobile industry is becoming more active every day. Without motor vehicles foreign countries cannot expect to keep pace with this country. Exports during the past year amounted to 8 per cent of the total production, and judging from the early demand for American vehicles this year will show an appreciable increase over these figures. In many countries American motor cars can be delivered cheaper than it costs to manufacture them in the home factories. Add to this the almost prohibitive cost of operation on the Continent, which must be equalized more nearly to a fair level, and it is not hard to understand why this country is sold almost to the point of saturation, while the others are standing almost still, comparatively speaking.

This is the time of the year when it is worth while for a farmer to inquire what his agricultural college or state experiment station can offer him in the way of information or study for winter leisure. Most of the agricultural colleges have correspondence courses practical lessons in crop production, soil management, poultry and dairy practical lessons in crop production, soil management, poultry, and dairy production, farm economics, and livestock husbandry. All of them publish free leaflets on farming subjects. The experiment stations are constantly reporting on the new things their staffs have been discovering about many of the everyday problems of farming. The season of farmers' weeks and extension schools in agriculture is on already. Not one of these activities but opens a door to many farmers. These colleges and stations are public institutions, eager to serve their rural constituency. Every farmer should make their acquaintance; few connections could be so profitable and instructive.

In the capital city of New Hampshire the newspaper space devoted to the farm bureau program stated by the vigorous gray little dairyman from Contoocook, who was chosen to his seventh term as president of the state federation, was scarcely exceeded by that given to President Coolidge's message to Congress. It was a substantial address, and it just bristled with the demands of the organized farmers of New Hampshire for legislative measures to alleviate discouraging conditions in the rural communities.

The farmers of New Hampshire evidently believe what that prophet of The national cleavage is still far too deep to allow the Czech Social-Democrats and the corresponding German Party to come together and pursue a common internal policy. An incident dently believe what that prophet of New Hampshire's future, William Sid-ney Rossiter, has been telling them as he has stumped the State delivering to that occurred recently demonstrates this fact. The German Social-Dem-oerats proposed a motion which the Czech Social-Democrats had themselves put forward previously in identical terms. When the proposal was fathered by the German Party, the Czechs voted against it. Thus real he has stumped the State delivering to those who have come to hear the word, his message of "Wake up, New Hampshire!" Mr. Rossiter has declared repeatedly that the only chance for the rehabilitation of agriculture on New Hampshire's granite hillsides is by more extended co-operation. That is the first essential. There must be more than that, but a united front and a concerted attack on the hard problems that have discouraged generations of New Hampshire farmers and dotted Socialist opinion is split and rendered partially ineffective. The Czech Social-Democrats are still the strongest party in the coalition Government, but party in the coalition Government, but whereas in the previous coalition they were one of two parties, they are now only one of five. His subject was bold and was of engrossing interest to his hearers. In his two lectures he set out to analyze the two big modern types of constitutional government, the Anglo-French and the American, to analyze them from the point of view of Czechoslovakia and the other suc of Czechoslovakia and the other succession states, and to indicate the weakness and strength of either system for the purpose of the new countries. The new states have conformed themselves rather to the Anglo-French type. In his first lecture Professor Sarolea showed the weakness which arises in the executive power under this type owing to party struggles. His basic theme was that at a critical time in the fortunes of Europe, such as at present, too little. of Europe, such as at present, too little is known of American institutions, and he urged the necessity of deep study of the American system, expounding the force of the American Constitution in his second lecture.

almost to the point or saturation, while the others are standing almost still, comparatively speaking.

Many countries are penalizing their transportation by well-nigh prohibitive taxes and tariffs, which add greatly to the initial cost of the vehicle. Fuel is being sold at a false high level, which discourages many motorists from using their machines more than is now the case. Many of these conditions are becoming remedled slowly, due to the fact that American manufacturers are showing by example that as the number of units increase the fuel cost will be lower, since the overhead expense of distribution will be less, and that too much taxation retards agricultural and industrial progress. The exporting of cars from this country for January is showing a very satisfactory total, from approximate shipping figures compiled by experts. Japan is absorbing many light American vehicles, which seem to fit conditions over there; South Africa is rapidly being organized for motor traffic; Russia has a market for high-priced cars; China is gradually awakening to the need for good roads and motor transport. In Norway, the Ford interests are erecting an assembling plant to take care of their trade in the north countries, and Australia is showing a decided preference for cars and trucks made over here, despite the home and English manufactures. Other countries are following suit, as fast as legislation is enacted, making the motor vehicle and the highways the greatest source of economic progress possible.

There are 2,800,000 miles of public roads in the United States. That gives ource of economic progress possible.

There are 2,800,000 miles of publi There are 2,800,000 miles of public roads in the United States. That gives five cars to every mile of road, using these figures as a total. As motorists confine most of their travel to 350,000 miles of paved highway, it means that we have 36 vehicles for every mile, which at a rate of 20 miles an hour, means that a car will be passed every five seconds with traffic running full. At the main corner in Newark, N. J., and for six blocks through the heart of the right or left, has had to be prohibited. On Sunday one will encounter a solid line of vehicles leading in and Los Angeles, all turning out either to the right or left, has had to be prohibited. On Sunday one will encounter a solid line of vehicles leading in and out of New York City, 50 to 60 miles out in any direction. Judging from early figures obtainable at this time, the production total for 1923 of over 4,000,000 will be exceeded in 1924. This means more congestion. Representatives from American factories are going to make a world-wide contact investigation, to determine the quickest, easiest, and most economical method of distribution of American vehicles, in every country on the globe. Peoples are realizing that the use of motor vehicles will do far more to solve the problems of Europe than can any other one possible factor.

ance in Great Britain will be held in the Kelvin Hall, Glasgow, from Jan. 25 to Feb. 2. This will be the twenty-first of the series organized by the Scottish Trade Association, and will have the patronage of His Royal Highness the Duke of York. Unlike other shows, this is essentially a traders' meeting, run along lines similar to the old-fashioned market place, where dealers come from all over the Kingdom to sell and buy vehicles, the most part of which are homed in Scotland. Entries for the European Grand Prix for two-litre cars, to be held in Lyons, France, Aug. 3, 1924, show four Italian entries, three British nominations and two French teams. These lists are by no means final as late entries may be made as late as the last day of February. The outstanding feature is the fact that all the cars entered will be equipped with supercharger devices, even the British cars, which have been opposed to the use of this mechanism up to recently. The cars for the 1924 race will be speedier than those of 1923, but on account of the circuit being shorter than in 1914, when a German car won with an average of 65½ miles per hour over a 500 mile course, it is doubtful whether this average will be equaled. with an average of 65½ miles per hour over a 500 mile course, it is doubtful whether this average will be equaled. The maximum speed will presumably be higher, however. The course has been hardened, so that it is a test for the most rugged car built. Speed has been sacrificed for abnormal driving conditions. The really fast leg of the course has been changed, so that in place of a fairly easy climb, the road becomes narrow, winding and hilly, calling for constant braking and acceleration. Fourwheel brakes, two-stroke superchargers, an infinitely veriable gear arrangement, and the six-cylinder small-bore engine, will get an unusual chance to prove their worth over this course.

Both teams warmed to play slowly and were not at top speed until late in the second period. The excellent defensive work of each was responsible for the two scoreless periods. Opportunities were frequent, but the two goal tenders were superb and turned away a variety of spectacular shots.

In the third period the locals broke into the scoring column when A. G. Smith captured a loose puck at midice and being uncovered chanced a long, accurate shot that went between the feet of J. E. Maltais, goal tender, before he seemingly realized it. Later in the period E. F. Enright, playing his first game for the Unicorn for some time, carefully weaved his way through the visiting forward line and shot from outside the outer defense, again beating Maltais for the second and final goal.

H. D. Nickle, goal tender for the B. A. A., was the outstanding star of the night, making what seemed impossible stops. Enright, G. P. Geran and Smith featured for the Unicorn on the offense, while A. J. A. Campbell starred defensively. C. W. Spriggins was best defensively. The summary:

COLUMBUS, O., Jan. 19—Award to two Ohio State University women athletes of block letters like those given members of the football teams, has brought criticism from varsity athletes. They do not believe that women should receive letters identical with those awarded for football. Dr. J. W. Wilce, director of football is of the same opinion, he declares. The letters were awarded recently to Miss Ruth Smith and Mrs. Eleanor Smith Welant, twin aisters, nationally known swimmers. The awards were made by the Women's Athletic Association.

To the Editor of The Christian Science Monitor:

Capt. Paxton Hibben is being tried before a "special board of officers," and is said to be threatened with expulsion from the Officers' Reserve Corps because he favors the recognition of Russia, and because he has been doing relief work with a committee which is avowedly sympathetic toward the present Russian Government.

If this report is true, it is a striking example of intolerance. Captain Hibben volunteered for the war and served all through it, with a high military record. His relief work in Russia since then is described by those who saw it as wholly nonpartisan and nonpolitical. Whether his views on Russia are sound or mistaken they are shared by some members of the United States Senate. A man who has served his country well both in war and peace ought not to be penalized for his political opinions.

the specified conditions have been fulfilled. These conditions involve the abandonment of the covenant's provisions for the coercion of nations by either economic or military force. This feature of the covenant was once lauded as its peculiar and supreme merit. For it we may thank the League to Enforce Peace. The coercion of nations by military or economic force is nothing else than war. The enforcement of peace is self-contradiction. The current discussion of the Bok plan will mark the passing of this fallacy. But I am sadly disappointed in the prize-winning plan, in that it offers form rather than substance, method rather than plan. A proper plan should have specifications. No. 1469 proposes that the United States shall take its place in the League of Nations transformed into "an instrument of mutual counsel," and possessing no authority to use force except "that of persuasion and moral influence." But it gives no hint of what the United States ought to say when seated at the conference table of the family of nations, po hint of what DATES CHANGED FOR SWIMMING TRYOUTS

Minneapolis outplayed the visitors through the greater part of the contest offensively, and except for a moment in the first period when the lone score was made, displayed a defense on a par with 'that of its opponents' strong line.

The game held the fans' attention through the clean and carefully executed brand of hockey displayed. Not a penalty was inflicted during the evening. Every man played, or attempted to play, in cu-operation with his tearmates, instead of playing individual against individual. It was chiefly the inability of local forwards, with the exception of C. Johnson, star center, to complete the plays the latter started that caused them to miss what chances they had to score. He played almost a lone-handed game. Erractic passes marred the Minneapolis game.

F. L. McCurry, Pittsburgh left wing, scored his team's only goal after 11 minutes on a rebound shot into the net from Alex McKinnon, who brough the puck down the lee and plerced the

Sales of First Editions— In New York Galleries

Special from Monitor Bureau

New York, Jan. 18 OST collections eventually dis-MosT collections eventually dissolve and go their way. Year in, year out, the paraphernalia and impedimenta of the collectors pass through the auction rooms in solemn sequence, a vast miscellany of heirlooms, treasures, goods, and chattels to be broken up under the auctioneer's hammer. But the acquisitive clean of complessours that sits in tive clan of connoisseurs that sits in sedulous ease through the long after-noon and evening sessions in the New York auction rooms keeps a sharp lookout for chosen items, and so the stream of objects flows on into new channels, forming new collections.

January is heavily scheduled with sales of books, paintings, furniture, objets d'art, but there is nothing of any greater interest than the dispersal at the Anderson Galleries some weeks ago of the Joseph Conrad manuscripts lection; the manuscript of "Victory" brought $6100, one of the largest sums recorded for such a work, while "Under Western Eyes," "Chance." "Almayer's Folly," "Typhoon," "Nostromo," "The Nigger of the Narcissus," and many other Conrad novels in the and many other Conrad novels in the form brought proportionately

More Conrad Treasures

Another galaxy of Conrad treasures is announced in the catalogue of the forthcoming sale of first editions from various sources to be held at the American Art Association beginning American Art Association beginning Jan. 30. Forty-five first editions, each inscribed and autographed by the author, covered practically the entire range of Mr. Conrad's literary career and offer some delightful glimpses into the by-ways of literary production. A note appended to "Typhoon and Other Stories" says, "Directly I got this conception of MacWhirr, I had my story. My second 'storm-piece'." my story. My second 'storm-piece'"; and the inscription in "Nostromo" and the inscription in "Nostromo" gives the personal touch of "Product of two years of steady work and con-tinuous steady grip on the subject."
The note written on the fly-leaf of "Chance" reveals "My first 'selling' success," and in "The Arrow of Gold" Conrad writes, "I regret I can say nothing more intimate. As a matter of fact all that would bear telling is told in the book."

The same sale offers 36 rare first editions and manuscripts of Thack-eray, one specimen containing examples of his slanting and his upright handwriting on the same page; also interesting volumes of Dickens, Field, Moore, Kipling, Masefield, Stevenson, James, Byron, and Grolier Club publi-cations, as well as a number of caricatures by Max Beerbohm, a drawing by William Blake and a series of superb sporting prints in color.

The third part of the library of John Quinn, widely known as a collector of rare books, brought more than 2000 items under the hammer this week at the Anderson Galleries, where the original autograph manuscript of James Joyce's "Ulysses" was sold for $1975. This unique manu-script consists of over 1200 pages and is bound in four morocco slip cases. A first edition copy of "Echoes, by Two Writers" (Rudyard Kipling and his sister, Beatrice) brought $1150; this unique volume was published at Lahore, India, in 1884. A first edition "Quartette" also published in ore the next year, with stories poems by Kipling, was sold for

Historic Engravings

At the same galleries the late George R. Barrett's collection of historic American engravings and other prints brought a total of $32,138, a very rare engraving of the landing of British troops at Boston in 1768 selling for $1050. An equestrian mezactint portical to f General Washington, thought to be the only impression in existence, fetched $1025, and one of Paul Revere's color engravings of early Boston brought $775.

The sale of etchings by Haden, Whistler. Zorn, etc., collected by Arthur W. Whistler's "Nocturne; the Thames from Battersea," was sold for $425 and Zorn's "Skerri-Kulla." a signed second state, brought $375. The collection of the late Samuel S. Laird of Philadelphia at the same galleries reached the sum of $139,565 for paintings, Chinese porcelains and miscel-

One of the most important sales of Colonial furniture of this season packed the Anderson Galleries with sintustic bidders, all eager to secure something from the collection of Francis Hill Bigelow of Cambridge, Mass. The total of $42,874 was realized, the top price of $2600 being paid for a mahogany block front desk originally owned by the Winthrop family of Boston. A Sheraton mahogany sofa went for $1075, and a dozen Duncan Phyfe dining room chairs brought $1800.

At the American Art Association the opening session of the sale of the James A. Garland collection of ancient works of art brought $39,241, a bottle

"The Humming Bird" Special from Monitor Bureau

NEW YORK, Jan. 13-Rivoli Theater in. 13, "The Humming Bird." a mo-on picture, adapted by Forrest Halsey om Maude Fulton's play, directed by Sidney Olcott.

This story of the Parisian underworld in the stirring days of the war has all the elements of a popular success. Romance, bravado, heroism, comedy, tragedy, sordidness and beauty alternate in swift succession and provide a vivid setting for Gioria Swanson's interpretation of an apache, which compares favorably with the other male impersonations that have been seen on the screen. Miss Swanson's forte, nevertheless, is along the lines of lovely frocks and frills, and it is a welcome if hardly plausible ending to the "Humming Bird" that allows her to appear as a charmingly garbed woman, the Montmartian metamorphosed into a mademoiselle of the Avenue du Bois de Boulogne. The very ease with which the screen effects the step from rags to riches, or vice to virtue, accounts for much of the flatness of the motion picture, much of its artificiality and tedium. Mr. Olcott has added greatly to the atmosphere and movement of this film by well selected bits taken at the front during the war and at the time of the armistice.

This concerto is a species of two-headed calf in music, and now and again it is revived much to the wonderment of audiences. But if such musical monstrosities are in order, why not revive the concerto for violin. violoncello, and piano by Beethoven, which contains far more real music in any two of its pages than the whole of Brahms' production and brings a third solo instrument into prominence into the bargain. differ so widely, that each would be far more effective by himself. Debussy's "Martyrdom of Saint Sebastian" was written as incidental music to D'Annunzio's mystery play of the same title. Like all music composed for a similar purpose, it suffers in being taken from its intended surroundings. Effective as these measures may be in their proper place, they can hardly be said to reveal to us the greater Debussy, the Debussy of "La Mer" and the "Nocturnes." The change was decided upon when it became increasingly apparent that a great many people persisted in the delusion that the Pirandello play was by Shakespeare, and in the further mistake that it is an historical drama instead of the modern comedy it is.

Frank Conroy, Edna Hibbard, Frederic Burt and Theresa Maxwell Compover, have been added to the cast of "Peacocks," the new Owen Davis comedy now in rehearsal for Lewis and Gordon.

Davidson Clark, and Alice Parks. produce)—Economy may have been practiced in many Berlin families this Christmas, but it was not apparent in the theaters and picture palaces, which have been, notwithstanding the high admission prices, crowded to overflowing throughout the holidays.

Classical plays held the boards as usual at the State Schauspielhaus and the Lessing, "Withelm Tell" alternating with "Peer Gynt" and "Candida" at the former, while Shakespeare had a prominent place in the repertory of the latter. The presentation of "Twelfth Night"—with Mozart's music—reached high standard of excellence, the cast including Elisabeth Bergner, Theodor Loos, Wilhelm Diegelmann, and other artists of acknowledged superior talent. be an abundance of good will, energy, and even money, everything, in fact, but the master-artist who can waken the sleeping beauty of a script and score into vivid life and unity. Ask any manager in London, Berlin or Paris, writes Gordon Craig, "whether he can invent and design the scenes which are to be shown on his stage. Or ask him whether he knows anything about historic or imaginative costume; and whether he knows a beautiful color, from an ugly one. Whether he can even combine lovely tones and colors together so as to form a whole, and whether he knows anything of the hand, the wrist, the arm, the neck, and all the rest of the values of the body in movement. Ask him whether he knows how much light is sufficient to fully illumine (here, by the way, Mr. Craig in his earnestness splits an infinitive) 20 cubic feet . . ask him any of these things, and he will blandly tell you . . that it is not his business. And then this remarkable master of the art. of the theater will call up his co-workers, and, pointing to them, he will say, "These are my assistants."

Masters, Not Assistants

As Mr. Craig points out, they are not his assistants, they are his mas-ters. If the work is open or ballet, or both, the above catechism might be extended indefinitely and the heckled master of the art of the theater would be justified if he resigned his position on the spot. Unfortunately for the theater, however, he never does. So it comes about that one often goes to a performance with mixed feelings of hope and doubt, only to leave with an unmixed feel-ing of distatisfaction. A producer may know a lot about stage technique but nothing of visual art or musicand vice versa. He may, as Mr. Craig seems to hint, even know nothing seems to hint, even know nothing about anything.

At Church House. Westminster, Mr. Boughton's music drama—the libretto is adapted from the Coventry Nativity Play—had an environment remote from the conventional theater and peculiarly suited to the character of the work. The long-drawn galleried half with waited root and great present searting up being an improleried half with vaulted roof and great ergan scaring up behind an improvised stage gave just the right atmosphere, and the simple, almost homely production allowed space, as it were, for the spectator's imagination to work. Imagination must be fed, of course, but, in the theater, is so often overfed that it refuses to work at all. A great critic of the nineteenth century claimed that the true tragedy which dogs the steps of most artists is not that they cannot realize their ideal but that they realize the coabideal but that they realize it too absolutely. The critic turns "to such works as make him brood and dream and fancy . . and seem to tell one that even from them there is an escape into a wider world . . It is through its very incompleteness that apprehension, subordinates them both to a pure synthetic impression of the work of art as a whole. . . . Devoid of Atmosphere

Of the Birmingham Repertory Com-pany's production of "Bethlehem," at the Regent Theater, designed by Mr. Barry V. Jackson, perhaps it might be said that it realized an ideal too absolutely. Unlike that at Church House, it often failed to reach imaginative in the said of the work of the Royal College of Music, to which I had the pleasure of introducing him at the pleasure, and although not without a cerbeauty, and, although not without a cerbeauty, and, although not without a cerbeauty, and, although not without a cerbeauty. Barry V. Jackson, perhaps it might be beauty, and, although not without a cerbeauty, and, although not without a certain formal charm, seemed singularly ence was not without a degree of condevoid of atmosphere. The device of the windows—one on either side of the windows—one on either side of the years ago, the further suggestion comes stage—in which sat tiers of uncomfor—that his time as a composer has been stage—in which sat tiers of uncomfortably haloed "angels," appearing and disappearing behind a gauze transparcher, struck one as being not only crude and obvious, but destructive to the spectator's imagination. The singing of these "angels" by the way, was occasionally anything but celestial. Listeners with sensitive ears may be excusably reluctant to entertain "angels" unaware of the right pitch. Other aspects of the production were not above criticism—particularly the ballet, which apart from the real cause, provided another sufficient reason for Herod's discomposure. In a word, although Mr. Jackson's "design" is not without its excellences, these too often give the impression of being missapplied. He has had too many "assistants."

One individual performance achieved distinction. The Mary of Miss Gwen Ffrangcon-Davies moved in an atmosphere of slow, grave beauty. Her gestures would have delighted the old Greek critic of 800 B. C., who wrote, "With so much ease did her rhythms alter as with her movements they passed from timb to limb; with such a show of color did sile unloose for us the thoughts of her breast; so

It had been my intention to interview him, but circumstances throwing us together on many occasions and in many circumstances during his stay made such a formal interview unnecessary. I propose, therefore, to give my impressions of the man and his ideas as I gathered them that even from them there is a scale into a wider world. It is through its very incompleteness that art becomes complete in beauty, and so addresses itself, not to the faculty of recognition nor to the faculty of reason, but to the esthetic sense alone, which, while accepting both amounted at times to shyness. Concerts Revived "Since 1906-1907 it had been out custom to play the regular Friday afternoon and Saturday evening sym-phony concerts and at intervals to make short trips to other cities, using Monday, Tuesday and sometimes Wednesday for that purpose and re-turning to Chicago for rehearsals for the regular symphony programs. After the United States entered the war, attendance in some of these cities diminished. In some towns it appeared likely that we would have to discontinue giving concerts because the local committees could not afford to make the necessary guarantee.

"Mr. Stock and I had an interview "Mr. Stock and I had an interview on the subject, with the result that we suggested to the trustees of our orchestra that we stay at home and, in addition to the "Popular" concerts which had become really popular, make an attempt to revive the performances for children. The board passed a resolution authorizing Mr. Stock and me to work out a plan. We did so, and announced a series of seven did so, and announced a series of seven did so, and announced a series of seven concerts to be given on the third Thursday of each month, October to April, inclusive. Before the programs were made, the interest in the children's concerts was so great and the sale of tickets so large that we had to put on six additional concerts. Since then we have played two series of six concerts each season, the programs for the two in each month being iden-tical. The attendance is nearly always practically to the capacity of Orchestra Hall. Letters have come from every part of the country and visitors have traveled to Chicago to find out how the children's concerts are con-ducted, and similar performances are now being given in many cities of the land."

Mr. Wessels stated that the first experience of the Chicago Orchestra with concerts for children occurred more than 20 years ago, when Theodore Tromas offered several "Young People's Programs" in the Auditorium Theater, which was the home of the orchestra at that time. The result of the experiment was more or less unsuccessful Mr. Thomas set before his youthful or adolescent listeners such things as the overture to Weber's "Preciosa," Mendelssohn's "Midsummer Night's Dream," overture, Saint-Saëns symphonic poem, "Phaëton," the "Peer Gynt" suite by Grieg, etc., and thereby hoped to win them over to the better art. with his ability to recognize orches-tral instruments when he hears them. To that end, he requests the perform-It is probable that Mr. Thomas' understanding of the child thought was far from comprehensive. He would have been unsympathetic toward any such elaborate scheme for the artistic education of children as that which his successor, Frederick Stock, maintains. Seven "Young People's Programs" were given by Mr. Thomas and thereafter the project of interesting children in symphonic music was abandoned and was not taken up again until five years ago. The foreign operas which are given in the Bolshoi, such as "Carmen,"
"Alda" and "Lohengrin," may also be considered masterpieces of stage pre-sentation. In "Aida, for instance, every scene suggests the two dimensional effects of the old Egyptian wall figures. Actors and chorus alike assume postures calculated to give the im-pression that one is witnessing sud-denly vitalized portraits of military processions and priestly ceremonies in the days of the Pharaohs. Equally distinctive was the setting for "Car-men." A modern Russian decorator named Fedorovsky designed a somewhat futuristic background for Bizer's opera, in which the gabled houses of the Spanish town are heaped together in pell-mell but effective confusion. Orchestral concerts are also ex-tremely popular in Moscow, and sev-eral German conductors, including Oscar Fried and Bruno Walter, have scenic and lighting effects, in the work of the choruses.

Edith Wharton By ERNEST RHYS

By ERNEST RHYS

TWO casual impressions of Mrs.
Wharton's books may serve to mark her living effect as a tale writer. I once went to pay a visit to Joseph Conrad at his country house in Kent, and arrived there to find him putting down a novel. When I looked at the cover to get a glimpse of the author's name, he said significantly "Edith Wharton," Whether, it was that after a dark journey on a winter's evening, any fireside circumstance seemed suggestive, or whether it was that the tribute of one writer to another is always significant, the result was to give that particular book

The other incident relates to a wet Bank Holiday, when the rain drove me into an uncomfortable restaurant which was not prepared for customers Rain without and discom fort within, both were forgotten under the spell of the story in that book called "Afterward." Most of her readers will remember the charm of her writing in that story—the realiza-tion of the old Dorsetshire house as seen through the eyes of two young Americans, and the extreme naturalness of the supernatural episode that to Mary Boyne and her hus-The ghost in the background is a ghost of conscience, figuring (as the film writers say) the sinister deed by which Edward Boyne gained his by which Edward Boyne gained his premature paradise and escaped from the American toils into the Dorsetshire retreat. The story is character istic of Mrs. Wharton's almost un power of using an old tale teller's mode, a ghost story, a bit of tragi-comedy in narrative, to work out the redemption or the loss suffered by some character at odds with life or circumstance. But the point is, with regard to this Dorsetshire mystery, that it was able so perfectly to hold the reader under the storyspell and make him forget the weather outside and the unhappy omelette

On a larger scale, with some change of perspective, Mrs. Wharton is still able to work with the same narrative command of her subject. She looks first for some psychological predicament; and then develops it with all the play of human nature under worldly stress, so as to keep us deeply engaged in the effort of the human creature to save itself, or to serve, at the same time, two masters. In House of Mirth" the story of the gradual obliteration, socially yet not spiritually, of Lily Bart, is so treated as to become a convincing satire of the society to which she can never perfectly adjust herself. It is the fable of the woman of fine possibilities whose secret self leads her to work contra mundum. Those who remember the year when that remarkable novel first appeared may recall how some critics complained of a want of human quality in the heroine herself. and others of a want of cometruction in her story; while the tribute paid to Lily Bart's story by Mrs. Wharton's fellow writers and by the greater public, was just as emphatic. With that book she definitely captured the big batallions; she was, after it, able, for better or worse, to depend as an artist upon that keen contemporary appre-ciation which must affect every tale-teller who deals with living themes and current problems.

The perfect contrast to "The House of Mirth," in the succession of Mrs. Wharton's novels, is "The Custom of the Country." Undine, the heroine of that book, is in every way the oppo-site of Lily Bart. She is built for worldly success, she has all the auspicious signs in her chart; she has good looks, a quick, unscrupulous in-fluence, a sure intuition of the open-ings in the game; and she is absolutely without heart in sacrificing those who are dependent upon her. At the very end of all, when she has attained almost everything that a vivid ambition has made her desire, there is just one little blot upon the splendor of her days. She realizes then that her supreme sucess would be that of becoming an ambassador's wife, and too late she is made to realize that her past career makes it impossible. It is the little speck on the horizon; and the art with which Mrs. Wharton leads on through seemingly triumphant chords of commonplace to that sharp discord is a capital instance of her narrative economy, and her sense of the misdirections of ambition and Possibly, when one has ranged over both her novels and her short stories. one is driven at the end to wonder If the very largeness of her method, that is to say, her theoretic understanding of the craft of story-telling. has not sometimes taken away some last more intimate touch in setting forth her characters? In some of her stories, while she produces all the sen-sation of life, while her people live, would in the actual world, they do not always convince us that in creating them she has herself become a part of and with them. They are portrayed from the outside, as if the delicate thread of sympathy between the creator and the creature had not been perfectly connected. In such stories, the problem counts to us for more than the creator and the stories are connected. The such stories are connected to us for wanderful with the problem counts to us for wanderful. creator and the creature had not been perfectly connected. In such stories, the problem counts to us for more than the people who have to work it out. They are admirably observed, subtly described; yet for some reason not easy to establish, they are not as "sib to us" as the creatures of fiction must be if they are to capture absolutely our bellef. We are puzzled to decide where this slight failure in the puppet attachment begins to take effect. In "The Custom of the Country," to take an instance, Mrs. Wharton is not quite in sympathy with the characters on which the fable depends for its final verisimilitude. The men are, in some episodes, better than the women; but we do not eare enough for them when they are under the thrall of Union.

Nor could the jacket indicate the Nor could the jacket indicate the personality of Olympiada Pupin, the author's mother, whose fine and strong face, in a photograph taken in 1880, arrests attention as one casually turns these pages. "She could neither read nor write, and she told me that she always felt that always held." she always felt that she was blind, in spite of the clear vision of her eyes. So blind, indeed, that as she expressed it, she did not dare venture into the world much beyond the confines of my native village. This was

Prof. Michael Pupin knewledge. "During supper my father, whose anger had cooled considerably, described to my mother the heresy which I was preaching on that afternoon. My mother observed that nowhere in the Holy Scriptures could be find support of the St. Elijah legend, and that it was quite possible that the American Franklin was right. that the American Franklin was right, wrong." So again (one regrets that space is exigent against longer quotation) the talks between mother and student, home on vacation described of the student of the studen period of study in Berlin, are inspiring.
The book adds another admirable volume to the shelf of modern autobiography, picturing with vividness and consecutive interest the life of an important man, his associates, influences, and environment. It will give a good many readers a new point view toward the achievements in natural science with which it deals, whose marvel and mystery are often clouded by the very-popularity of the interest that their more obvious forms of application inspire. The preface interestingly tells the story of the beginning and growth of the Palmer Library. "The cellection of English poetry, extending from Chaucer to Masefield, has been gathered under the stimulus of three interests, interests personal, affectional, and institutional." The personal interest came through a love of poetry, inspired in his youth by George Herbert, followed by the natural desire to possess this author and later favorities in first editions. The affectional and institutional interests were added through Mss. Palmer, who was also and institutional interests were added through Mss. Palmer, who was also devoted to poetry. "Together we were constantly tracing the bye-ways of English poetry and an original edi-tion, which the author himself might much of the means. All income from that book has been used for that pur-pose and to Wellesley I leave its copy-right for the further increase of the collection." The catalogue reveals the richness of the legacy of the

Besides being first and authorita-tive editions, fully a third of the Pal-mer books are enriched by autograph and laid-in letters from the authors, and other personal additions. The books given by Mr. Palmer all contain his bookplate and in the catalogue are distinguished from those accruing from other sources by the absence of the name of the donor.

There is not space to comment even briefly upon the titles of the treasures, but we cannot resist the temptation to call attention to some of the most interesting.

There are many delightful Blake, items, including Blake's first publication, "Poetical Sketches," besides "Songs of Innocence," "Songs of Experience," illustrations for the Book of Job, designs for Young's "Night Thoughts" and for Gray's Poems. The choicest Blake in the collection is the copy of "Songs of Innocence," exe-cuted for his friend Samuel Rogers. It bears the Samuel Rogers bookplate as well as that of his nephew.

Among copies of Keats, is the first edition of "Endymion" (1818), bearing on the half-title tile autograph "J. Severn, Rome, 1823," with a letter from Severn laid in.

The British Mu-seum has one and Trinity College, Cambridge, the other. Of the third edition (1559) but one copy is known. Mr. Palmer Iails to tell us where that is.

There is a Kilmarnock Burns, an There is a Klimarnock Burns, an 1859 "Rubhiyat," and "The Chronicle" of John Hardyng (1543). In the large group of Shelley there is a copy of "Zastroasi," very rare. By the way, it is interesting that Mr. and Mrs. Palmer were generous in making their collection, for they did not confine themselves to their own savorites. Neither of them cared for Shelley, yet the list of Shelley titles is long and the books valuable. Neither cared espe-cially for Poe, Rossetti, or Morris, yet all are fairly well represented.

In the Browning group is the orig-inal manuscript of Mrs. Browning's "Aurora Leigh" and the first edition of "The Battle of Marathon," both of which are eagerly coveted by colle tors. In the menty pages devoted to Robert Browning, the outstanding vol-ume is "Pauline," the heart's desire of all collectors.

There are long lists of Dryden, Pope, Goldsmith, and Tennyson. The more than forty Milton items include firsts of "Poems" and "Paradise Lost." The collection is especially rich in in-cunabula and in sixteenth and sevententh century poets. In fact, the lover of first editions will have his attention halted by some rarity on almost every page. Wellesley is certainly to be con-gratulated upon the possession of such a library, gathered with such loving thought of one who served the college so well, and bibliographers will be glad of this descriptive catalogue of those same treasures.

Songs of Delicate Sentiment

Widely heralded Sea-Change Sca-Change comes a new poet. In By Muna Lee. these days a new poet is no rarity. There are so many that the count is lost. A card index is necessary to keep track of them. Most have a apark of the "divine fire," few more, yet is the spirit kept alive while the world waits for a master to rise.

Muna Lee today, tomorrow someone else! This singer has a fine flair for else: This singer has a one hair to delicate sentiment, and a touch—as delicate as her emotion. Her lyric ability is undeniable. "The Flame Trees" shows this.

For I have reached a fairer place Than I had hoped to find. With all the life that I had known A scroll cast off behind;

"And changed into a slighter thing The torrent of old grief Than heavy waves that break in spray. White on the outer reef;

And love so sure and joy so strong That pain and sorrow are thinned To a little mist that cannot blur The flame-trees in the wind."

There is a subtlety here, a wisp of suggestiveness, clusive and alluring, even though the musical quantity is not perfectly sustained to a sensitive ear. "Mid-Western" is beautifully cadenced, picturesque and passionate, with the singing quality here unim-

Whatever Aprils I may know April will always mean to me A wet bank dark with violets, A whitely-blossoming locust tree.

And the rough furrows of the plain Could call me laughing from defeat. Remembering like's battle shout. The lyric of the winter wheat!"

"Melilot" is an interesting and arresting book of verse. The first stanza, with its unique arrangement of many liquids, produces an unusual rippling measure. Here again are sight, sound, and scent, mingled in a lowely fragile suggestiveness.

Behind the house is the millet-plot, And past the millet, the stile; And then a hill where melilot Grows with wild camomile.

There was a youth who bade me good bye
Where the hill rises to meet the sky;
I think my heart broke, but I have forgot
All but the scent of the white melilot."

Of the sonnet sequence the conclusion ing eleventh is cut in more deeply than the other 10, fittingly enough as a climactic sonnet should be ao.

"Along my ways of life you never came— You would be alien to the paths I take. These orchards never seddened for you sake. This larkspur never rustled with your name. From boyhood they agree to disagree, so it is only in the natural course of events that Harlan should not follow his brother in the buying and developing of a tract of land then far beyond the bounds of the city. Dan fights on alone for years, jeered at by his wife and his would-be business associates, ignored or toler-ated by his brother, humored by his father and mother, lectured roundly by his grandmother, under-stood only by Martha Shelby, who lives next door and would have liked to be married to Dan. Success does come at length, when Dan begins to see first one lot, then another sold. But the moment they catch him off guard, the business men of the city snatch from him the fruit of his labor of years, and, when his own family sell the old house and move out to live at Ornaby (thus justifying all Dan's wildest predictions), he is no longer there to see. For him triumph lay along the rugged path, not in the arrival at his goal.

It is beside the point, of course, but we cannot resist calling attention to an exclamation uttered at frequent in-tervals by Mr. Shelby, also of "The Midlander." "Gee-mun-ent-ly!" We Midlander. #### Color and Character These Women Put in Their Toys

IN CHEYNE WALK, Chelses, at the corafe of Church Street, where it debouches on the Embankment, stands old Chelsea Church. On the opposite corner, facing the River Thames, is a house with a quaint old World shop front, and displayed behind the square-pened windows is an array of gayly colored children's toya. So, gay is the coloring of the toys that passers-by are wont, to exclaim that they "must be Russian," somewhat to the chagrin of the proprietors, Miss M. V. Wheelhouse and Miss A. B. Ellis, who deprecate the implication that the English are not capable of putting color in their craft work.

From Miss Wheelhouse was elicited the fact that this small but very distinctive industry is one of the survivals of many similar attempts, begun during the war, to develop toymaking in England.

"I started with a partner, Miss Jacobs, in 1915," Miss Wheelhouse said, "and I think that the secret of our survival was that we could design. After a few years, Miss Jacobs was obliged to give up, and I carried on alone until Miss Ellis joined me. It is an ideal partnership. We often work things out together. For instance, this barge"—she pointed to the one shown in the illustration—"Miss Ellis designed and I colored."

"My partner and I make the first model of the toys and then they are carried out to the workshops. We are always being asked if it is difficult to think out new toys, and we reply that the difficulty is to find time to make all those that we think of! We specialize particularly in little wooden animals and birds, which sell at from 2d. to 1s. 6d. each."

Here attention was directed to a shelf with rows and rows of these quaint little creatures. They are often bought as decorations, and teachers of bought as decorations, and teachers of art classes frequently use them as models for their students, for, as Miss Wheelhouse remarked, "They are much more amusing to draw than the ordinary loaf of bread, or hairbrush!" Among the birds were storks, fiamingos, and magples, all with wings that move, and fantail pigeous, and ostriches that sway their bodies, and cocks and hens, and delightful geese, with yellow beaks and feet, all wonderfully well designed. Miss Ellis has always been interested in animals, and had done many wood carvings of animals before the joined me. This little Pekinese is to hers, and is one of the most popular of our animals. An expert told us that our toy had all the lines of a champion!"

"I paint every individual doll so that each has a distinct character of its own," said Miss Wheelhouse. "You can alter the expression completely by changing the mouth and the shape of the eyes and eyebrows, and you would not imagine what a change a difference in complexion makes. To make, first cut the note paper into halves along the folded edge, then fold each half again. Remove the thread from your sewing machine needle and carefully run the paper under the guide of the machine, leaving an accu-rate quarter of an inch margin on three sides. The fold of the paper should remain untouched. That makes a double sheet, three of the four edges of which are perforated.

When you are ready to send a let-ter, write on the inside of the folded sheet, then moisten the edges with glue that will not curl the paper, seal them, write the address on the outside of the folded sheet. #### What American Master Craftsmen Are Doing in Scattered Shops

To Is well, in this day of machinemade products, to call attention

The little studio, where one man artist who creates beautiful things because of the love he has for his work. Such workers very often have no way of selling their output except through art centers. And a great many persons who would very much like to buy the beautiful hand-made wares of such artist-craftsmen, do not know where to find them.

It is unusual to walk into a shop where every item of merchandize is the work of hand-craftsmen, but such was our experience the other day when we visited the newly opened New York shop of The Society of Arts and Crafts which has had a shop in Boston for many years.

This society is probably doing more to keep alive the spirit of craft-work than any other influence in America today. There are more than 1000 craftsmen members scattered over these United States, each of whom sells the best of his wares through the society. Without such a selling arrangement, many artist-craftsmen would have to turn to less congenial work, for at least part of their liveli-

A whole section of the shop was devoted to pewter, and the soft glow of the metal plates and pitchers and porringers and bowls was so gentle and showed such evidence of loving work that this visitor decided it was the most beautiful display in the shop. Many of the pewter articles seemed to have been copied directly from

STEADY PRICE MOVEMENT IN

MOVEMENT IN

STOCK MARKET

Some Profit Taking and Short

Selling in Evidence on

Exchange

Prospects of continued low rates for money, further advances in crude oil prices, and reports of an impending increase in the price of steel products tended to stabilise prices fairly well in today's brief session of the New York stock market, but there were periods of 'profit-taking and evidence of some short selling.

U. S. Cast Iron Pipe broke five points from its early high figure, and Davison Chemical, several of the motors and a few of the rubbers also moved lower. Higher figures ruled for various equipment and the public utility shares.

The closing was steady. Sales approximated 355,000 shares.

Bond prices moved within narrow limits in today's early dealings, with railroad issues extending their losses under the pressure of profit-taking sit. Paul 4s of 1925, which made marked gains earlier in the week, yielded more than a point, and weakness developed in Northwestern 3½s and New York Central-Lake Shore 3½s.

TRADERS NEED NEW INCENTIVE TO BUY STOCKS

Short Selling Principal Cause for Reaction Occurring This Week

This Week

NEW YORK, Jan. 19 (Special)—The big industrial leaders of this country are by no means pessimistic. On the contrary, they are quite hopeful, and even confident over the business outlook. The leaders in the financial district of this and other large cities of the United States are of like mind.

Even speculators in stocks, as a whole, are not bearish on the stock market. Some professional traders did turn to the short side this week and operated rather extensively. To their selling, more than to any other single cause, were due whatever reactions took place. The most pronounced decline was at the beginning of the period, but it averaged only between 1 and 2 points for the industrials.

A glance at the net changes in stocks as a whole for the week will show that they were not large. There were goodsized advances in a comparatively few insues from day to day, but the market as, a whole did not make big headway. The average observer may ask why this was. The facts are that stocks had been advancing pretty steadily for many weeks. While the news, as a whole, was not distinctly discouraging, it was not of a character to induce aggressive buying of stocks on a speculative basis.

Market Needs New Incentive

Market Needs New Incentive

Market Needs New Incentive
The truth is also that the Street needs a new incentive of rather large proportions to cause it to buy securities freely and generally, in the expectation of a further sustained advance from about the present level.
While a favorable interpretation was placed upon most of the happenings in Washington and in Europe, it must be admitted on careful analysis, that what has occurred so far on either side of the Atlantic has not been sufficiently definite to give genuine ground for hope of future constructive developments.
Well Street did not be the street of the stree definite to give genuine ground for hope of future constructive developments.

Wall Street did not like any of the measures that were introduced in Consress relative to the railroads and the corporations. Stock market interests and corporation officials would be much disturbed, if a single one of these bills or resolutions should actually be put into effect.

The Straet continued to believe that nothing of this kind would happen simply because of the apparent political mix-up in Congress itself. It is to be noted that railroad stocks did not reflect any uneasiness on the part of either speculative or investment holdings.

The situation appeared to be that those who have that class of securities did not care to sell and those who did not have them preferred to wait before making commitments.

From day to day there were special movements in a few issues such, for instance, as in Lehigh Valley and Pittsburgh & West Virginia yesterday, each of which enjoyed a further advance of about 3 points.

The political situation in Mexico is far from what every good friend of that country, whether native or foreign, would like to have it. The revolutionary movement, wholly of a political and personal character, of course, is having a pronounced effect upon the economic position of the country.

Crude Off Affected

Crade Oil Affected

Probably the crude oil industry is being more seriously affected than any other. In spite of reports only yesterday that the rebeis had extended their activities to the Tampico District, the stocks of oil companies whose principal sources of supply are in Mexico, were not weak. Strange to say, the Pan-American Petroleum shares, that have been under considerable pressure of late, were really strong. It is to be hoped that prompt action on the part of the American Government, announcement of which was made yesterday in Washington, will hurry along the ending of this entirely unnecessary revolutionary movement.

The political situation in Europe has developed about as had been expected. The Dawes committee has organized and begun its work and, according to all the cable advices, the characteristic vigor and directness of its chairman have made a favorable impression in the leading European capitals.

It has been distinctly encouraging to note the efforts toward co-operation on the part of France and Germany, and added efforts by the Government of each country separately, to stabilize its own currency and pave the way for each country separately, to stabilize its own currency and pave the way for what it is hoped will result from the deliberation of General Dawes and his associates, in conjunction with repre-sentatives of the two governments.

Decline In Exchanges

Decline In Exchanges

In view of existing conditions and the uncertainty of the outcome, the sharp declines and recoveries in the leading currencies of Europe were not in the least surprising. If only they will serve to bring the governments and the peoples of the different nations to a realization of the concessions that they must make for their own individual good and that of Europe as a whole, they will prove to have been a tremendous blessing in disguise.

Even greater uncertainty surrounds the political situation in Great Britain than the negotiations in behalf of Germany and France. At this writing, it seems probable that a strike will actually be ordered of railroad and other workers in Great Britain for midnight, Sunday.

According to the latest reports, the Labor Party is expected to displace the Baldwin Ministry during the first day or two of next week. What it will be able to do in handling a strike of its own people. If one actually occurs, will be not only interesting in the extreme, but highly important.

Great Britain's Experiment
Whether the Labor Party will be compelled to assume the responsibilities of the Government alone or whether it will have the virtual support of the Liberals, is another question, that has not been determined. It looks now as though the Liberals were fiirting with the Laborites, in the hope of using them as an entering wedge for getting back into power.

an entering wedge for getting back into power.

All this represents a tremendous experiment for Great Britain, which is bound to have an important effect in every direction in that country, and to be reflected in other European countries, and on this side of the Atlantic. The possibility of another general election in Great Britain only adds to the present degree of uncertainty and confusion.

The feeling in conservative circles here is that unless these various sit.

present degree of uncertainty and con-fusion.

The feeling in conservative circles here is that unless these various sit-uations come to exert a greater influ-ence than they have so far, the busi-ness of our country will so forward on a fairly good sized scale, although in a somewhat restricted way, and that the stock market will be much the same for a while as it has been this week.

WHOLESALE DRY GOODS

CHICAGO, Jan. 19—John V. Farwell Company's review of the wholesale dry goods trade says: Wholesale dry goods business continues to show improvement over the previous week and a noticeable gain in the number of rost orders received. January orders for handkerchiefs and other noveity lines indicate that retailers' holiday business cleaned up stocks quite generally, bringing in a favorable situation for the spring.

WEEK'S REVIEW OF CHIEF EVENTS IN

Market Recovers-Labor Scarce Thought Overdrawn-French

LONDON, Jan. 19-The last week in LONDON, Jan. 19—The last week in the city here has been one of extraordinary changes. The slump at its beginning, however, was no more remarkable than the recovery at its close. Last Monday the dollar rate for pound sterling was down to 4.22.

The share market was depressed and

The share market was depressed and the 5 per cent War Loan went down to Eastern SS pf E Mass pf B Mass pf B Mass ctf. £98, 17s., 6d. At the same time, the stampeds to get rid of francs occurred, French exchange reaching the unprecedented low rate of 98.5 to pound sterling.
Today dollar exchange was back at 4.24. The 5 per cent War Loan was in demand at £99, 5s., while francs were 93.10, after being 90.50 yesterday. The explanation is to be found in the political harmanians.

93.10, after being 90.50 yesterday. The explanation is to be found in the political happenings.

In the beginning of the week, apprehensive investors were transferring sterling holdings to dollar ones in anticipation of what the Labor Government might do. By Wednesday this movement was completed and the bears who had taken advantage to come in, were beginning to look for cover. The temperateness of the King's speech Tuesday and the growing realization that the Labor scare is overdone, has greatly reinforced the market.

On Wednesday further strength was brought by news from Paris that the French Government had decided to reintroduce Monsieur Delasteyrie's wise proposals, which it will be remembered were rejected by the Chamber of Deputies a year ago, for supporting franc sachange by an increase of 25 per cent in taxaction, supplemented by extensive cuts in expenditure. This has been taken to indicate that the French Government at last is realizing the nature of the financial precipies toward which it has hitherto been moving.

Change in French Policy greatly reinforced the market.

On Wednesday further strength was brought by news from Paris that the French Government had decided to reintroduce Monsieur Delasteyrie's wise proposals, which it will be remembered were rejected by the Chamber of Deputies a year ago, for supporting france exchange by an increase of 25 per cent in taxation, supplemented by extensive cuts in expenditure. This has been taken to indicate that the French Government at last is realizing the nature of the financial precipice toward which it has hitherto been moving.

Change in French Polley

Even if Delasteyrie's plan gets through, it will leave the French budget, when war restoration charges as well as ordinary expenditures are included, several billions short of balancing.

Nevertheless its importance cannot be overrated as indicative of a change in the Polncaré policy of inflation and aggression which up to now has filled Europe with alarm. For the moment, it has halted the downward rush of exchange, Much more will, however, be required if the danger of collapse is change. Much more will, however, be required if the danger of collapse is to be removed.

How the city of London regards the situation may be judged to some extent by the fact that the insurance rate against the loss from francs falling to 200 to the pound sterling during the current calendar year is still quoted here as high as 30 per cent. This view is attengthened by the extraordinary high interest the French Government is now obliged to pay for accommodation. The net yield of the latest credit national bonds for the reconstruction loan of 3,000,000,000 francs with the French state guarantee to pay 6 per loan of 3,000,000,000 francs with the French state guarantee to pay 6 per cent and taking into consideration their issue price of 96 per cent with redemption and other privileges, averages 7% per cent free of French taxation, this being nearly double the corresponding tax free yield of British Government

Some Annual Reports

Among the annual Reports
Among the annual company reports issued here this week is that of the Westminster Bank, which has continued to do well despite the general slackness in trade, as shown by the £5,000,000 diminution in its advances.
Among company meetings, one of themost interesting has been that of the Alexanders Discount Company. C. F.
Campbell, presiding, showed how deposits of the clearing banks here continued to fall until last March, a small recovery taking place in the second half of the year. At the same time the total of the clearing banks acceptances increased from £73,000,000 to £87,000,000, which suggests that the lowest point in the depression has been passed.

MARKET OPINIONS

Hayden. Stone & Co., Boston: It is usually fashionable to state that stocks ar passing from weak to strong hand: ally fashionable to state that stocks are passing from weak to strong hands. Frankly, we believe exactly the opposite is taking place today. The great activity with the appearance of strength is alluring. We do not have, to be sure, severe depressions, except as a result of overextension of credit. This has been conspicuously lacking in the present instance and consequently nothing of the kind is to be expected, but we cannot see what there is in the business prospect for the market to discount by a general advance from this level.

Schirmer, Atherton & Co., Boston: Bear talk, bad news, and the unfortunte political mess in Washington do not seem to affect values greatly on the Stock Exchange. Were the public carrying large amounts of stock on borrowed money, the story might be otherwise. The facts in the situation appear to be that the big interests are still accumulating securities, especially the low-priced railroad shares, and that confidence among business men of all grades is growing rather than decilining.

Under 30 days 4½ @4½ Elmer H. Bright & Co., Boston: A some-what conservative attitude toward stocks which have had a sharp rise seems ad-visable, but opportunities to secure, at recessions, some securities which are de-veloping good earning power and which have not experienced an extended ad-vance should not be neglected.

F. I. Milliken & Co., Boston: Current industrial news is in general bullish. One of the encouraging features was the advance of pig iron prices in the Chicago district. Another encouraging factor is increasing activity in the steel industry. The industry is now operating as a whole on about 75 per cent of capacity, whereas the United States Steel Corporation's rate is about 85 per cent. Present forecasts are that the industry will average 80 per cent for the first six months of 1924. The cent for the first six mouths of 1924. The tire industry is also feeling effects of bet-ter business. Perhaps the two most im-portant factors in the current rise are cheap money and bright political outlook.

Tucker. Bartholomew & Co., Boston: The market cannot move in the same direction all of the time, and if we are to have a spring rise it is not apt to be placed on top of such a substantial upswing as we have already had. Both the season and the proportions which his upward movement has attained suggest the imminence of something in the way of a downward movement and a tempering of speculative enthusiasm preparatory to an advancing market during the spring months.

J. S. Bache & Co., New York: It is an advancing market but with no whole-sale movement. Only the best securities will prove attractive—at least to the investor. And it might be well for the speculator to pursue the same policy. Munds & Winslow, New York: We be-lieve the rails, oils and steels should be bought on all dips.

Lizette Woodworth Reese. "Traditionalist?"

MANY seasons have come and gone since I saw spring waken that part of "old Baltimore," still known to many of its residents as "Harford Road," into a spot of pastel beauty. Lilac bushes, heavy with white or lavender clusters, grew in thick clumps or even bushy hedges, in nearly every spacious front yard; great beds of hyacinths shook their perfume-laden bells in the warm breeze; long rows of golden daffodils lifted their fluted faces high to greet the sun. I hope that the city has not crowded out this quaint old neighborhood, with its shuttered frame houses and its age-old air of having been there for uncounted years! Somehow, I hesitate to hunt out this oncelovely corner of the world, for, should I and rows of small brick house and lovely corner of the world, for, should I find rows of small brick houses and homely shops where once the hum-ming birds flitted fearlessly about and ming birds fitted fearlessly about and the orchard orioles sang their carols from the shelter of gnarled old apple trees, I would find it difficult to comprehend such description.

In this neighborhood Lizette Woodworth Reese lives, and, because she stays there, I feel fairly confident that "old Harford Road" retains much of its quiet charm. One could never picture Miss Reese at home in a noisy, humdrum setting. She and the Harford Road of my memory belong quite definitely together. They both express the dignity and distinction that is rightly associated with Baltimore—that semi-southern city, rich in poetic tradition.

meyer's new book—"American Poetry fince 1900," and what he has written there in his brief sketch of Lizette Reese and her work information I have been reading Louis Unter there in his brief sketch of Lizette Reese and her work interests me greatly. I cannot say that I entirely like the way that he classes her with the traditionalists. If he means to convey the idea that she belongs with those who have clung close to the structure and line of genuine crafts. structure and line of genuine craftsmanship in poetry I agree with him;
but if, as it seems, he is relegating Miss Reese's very excellent verse to take prompt and decided exception.

His playful alfusions to her as belonging to a period of "Belleek tea-cups

Mr. Untermeyer is less familiar with Miss Reese's earlier verse than one would suppose possible. Very early, in one of her first little books, in fact,
we find these lines:

Creeds grow so thick along the way, Their boughs hide God; I cannot pray.

There is always dignity and style about everything that Miss Reese has written—a calm assurance that is very pleasing in this day of hurriedly-thrown-together verse. I am inclined

Luther at Wartburg

Castle

ALTHOUGH Martin Luther spent less than a year in secret retirement at the Wartburg, the castle will always be connected with his name. Built on a high promontory amid a wealth of woods, it holds a commanding view of Eisenach and the beautiful Thuringian country. It had already proved rich in historical memories and legendary tales when Luther took refuge there in 1622. Now

Luther's identity, while secluded there, was carefully concealed. He allowed his hair and beard to grow. Lizette Reese a very skillful poet in pastels, for all her poetry has that exquisite quality of deficate, colorful expression. Very early in her busy life she must have decided to give the world only the best that she was able to express and her sonnets are so fin-shed in style and so choice in imagery that she has become most generally that she has become most generally known as a writer in this particular form. If those who imagine, as Mr. Untermeyer does, that she "writes her poetry in black lace mitts," will read that sonnet "Triumph," they may recognize that she certainly was not wearing lace mitts when she wrote these final lines:

Mine is the triumph of the tulip flower, My ruined April will not let you by, To east my laughter and to west my

Of course, the only thing I had cherished against her was the fact that she had been teaching school for so many years that, from the viewpoint of seventeen, she must be dry and uninteresting. It did not take five minutes to change every preconceived notion I had ever entertained. I liked her direct manner and the way she laughed; I liked her lavender gown and the smile that hov-

There seems to have been very lighted in Lizette Reese's career to have inspired poetry. Surely the forty-five years spent in teaching could not have been the inspiration of her poetry. I rather think that the lovely verses are the outgrowth of solitary hours in which she "dreamed dreams and saw visions"—such dreams of delicate.

The outstanding wonder of Lizette Reese's poetry, to my thought, is that it has sung itself so forcefully and withal so sweetly through nearly half a century spent in the class-room. It takes a royal heart to shut the mental door on the petty-troubles of the day and flood the consciousness with poetry—poetry that is rich in beauty of conception and skillful in execution.

This forced retirement bore rich fruit not only for Luther but also for the German people. For during these months he made his, monumental translation of the New Testament, a masterpiece of German literature which has never been equaled in that language. He did not use the Latin Vulgate but the original Greek, and he sought with careful patience for the simple ordinary words which would make clear the manning of the reeds woven round it, by a hand which itself cut them in the little marshy dale where the hyacinth and dark violet crocus weave tapestries. There is no honey like the honey of the speech of the home and market place. The difficulties of his task are indicated in the words, "In translating I have always made the effort to write pure and clear German; and it has often happened that we have sought a fortnight or even three or four weeks for a single word and then sometimes not found it."

His long and intimate acquaintance with the Bible helped him for he had for years been a diligent student of it and had become imbued with its spirit and contents. He wrote, "Translating is not everybody's gift. It demands a genuinely pious, true, industrious, reverent, Christian, learned, experienced and practical heart." It was Luther who gave to the German Nation a German literary language which all Germans could

FROM Mr. Ramsay Macdonald, leader of the British Labor Party, who shortly will become Premier, there comes a new message of hope to the people of the world. In words which should forever silence the apologetic pacificists who have nothing to offer as an antidote for war even when there seems no recourse but a resort to force, he proclaims the hopeful gospel of courageous and constructive statesmanship, backed by a determined and enlightened public opinion which has signified its approval of policies which, if adhered to, will make war unnecessary, if not actually Concretely analyzed, this may be accepted as defining, in advance, the attitude of British Labor and Socialist leaders toward the perplexing problems which are facing Europe today. More constructive and more original than an attitude of non-resistance or non-cooperation, it opens to the people of every country a vista wherein there are no lowering horizons, no mutterings of discontent and anger, portents throughout the ages of gathering war clouds. But it is significant that the advocate who sees fit to enunciate this theory of making war impossible defines the process as a courageous and virile one, rather than one which indicates a desire to evade responsibilities when those responsibilities thrust themselves upon a nation or a party. He says that mere verbal attacks upon war and militarism are not enough; that "we must fight them when they are building up policies and making conditions from which they cannot be dislodged."

Courage as an Antidote for War

It is in this preparedness and willingness to fight that the strength of every great nation must lie in the future. It is no longer wise in peace to prepare for war, but it is wise in peace to prepare against war. As the world has weighed nations and found them wanting, the rule has been to estimate a nation's strength by the measure of its preparedness for war. It takes courage and initiative to reverse this assaying process and to turn the thought of humanity in the right direction. Perhaps Mr. Macdonald and the party which he represents cannot accomplish this single-handed. With the co-operation of other peoples and other parties the task is not impossible.

Of course the speaker had in mind the present situation in Europe. He referred to conditions in France and the attitude of his own country toward France, in emphasizing the present extreme need of a resort to some other expedient than war, toward which, in his opinion, Europe seems to be again gradually drifting. It is not strange, in the face of such a condition, that he realizes that it requires more courage to take a determined stand against war, conscious of the ease with which even enlightened nations submit themselves to the mesmerism of hatred, revenge, selfishness, and opportunism, than to stem the cross-currents of established public opinion in championing a constructive peace policy.

Unkind words awaited the not careless or thoughtless declaration by a great statesman a few years ago who said that the people of his country were "too proud to fight." A civilized Christian nation should be too proud to fight. It is ignominious and degrading to resort to human slaughter in an effort to establish, by wrong means, a pretended or admitted right. It would not be said disrespectfully of a person that he was too proud to steal or to commit some other crime. Surely the time will come, and by just the method pointed out by Mr. Ramsay Macdonald, when it will be said, not in derogation, but in commendation, of the great nations of the earth, that they, likewise, are too proud to fight. because they have learned that war is the subterfuge of the ignorant, the vicious, and the wicked. The root and fiber of militarism must be destroyed. But they can be destroyed only as something better is put in their place. First of all to be eradicated is the fear of war.

IT SEEMS at times to those who are critical of the American Congress as if inattention, preoccupation or plain perverseness were almost habitual with senators and members of the House of Representatives. Occasionally it looks as if the voices of the people, who pay the solons' salaries and on whom they must ultimately depend for support and re-election, did not reach them, or, if the sounds did penetrate to the congressional consciousness, the messages apparently were confused by some sort of interfering waves so that they were well nigh unintelligible to the listeners.

Uncharitable critics have intimated that the statesmen were entirely to blame for this. The voices of the people were clear enough, they said, but the political listeners either let their attention wander or willfully insisted on hearing only messages sent by special interests. Whatever the causes may be, this condition is unfortunate. It interferes with the proper dispatch of public business and tends to injure the reputations of statesmen for wisdom and for loyalty to their actual employers, the people.

It might be a good plan for both senators and representatives, in order to improve broadcasting between the public and themselves, to study radio apparatus and its workings. The people have sending stations all over the country. These may be designated as PWAI (Public Welfare And Interest) stations. They all use about the same wave lengths and nearly the same intensity. Other stations are scattered around which might be grouped under the general designation of SAPI (Selfish And Private Interests) with individual letters such as STEEL. COAL, RR, MFR, FRMR, LBR and the like.

An impression is abroad that the SAPI stations have sending mechanisms of extra power and that they employ most skillful operators. It is intimated that they are extremely clever with interference that breaks into and interrupts the messages from the PWAI stations. It may be a wrong impression, but it sometimes seems as if the Congressional listening sets were not up to date, or that the solons did not know how to tune them just right, so that, while messages were received clearly and con-stantly from the SAPI stations, those from the PWAI senders came intermittently and feebly or not at all.

Assuming that congressmen really, want to get the public's messages clearly and do not seek to tune their receivers only for the SAPI stations, it might help them to read carefully this description of a radio set that is praised for efficiency:

The receiver is exceptionally simple to operate. On the panel are control knobs. The lower left-hand knob is the main tuning control, for selecting the desired station. Opposite this control, on the right-hand side, is the vernier control, which permits of very accurate tuning. vernier control, which permits of very accurate tuning. In the center of the panel is the adjusting knob for the crystal detector. This detector represents a development which is the result of several years' experimentation. The design is such that the detector is practically shock-proof.

Here is just the idea for listening sets for Congressional offices—a receiver that is simple to operate, a left-hand knob for selecting the right stations (to be permanently tuned for hearing the PWAI and against the SAPI), a right-hand knob for hearing the public's voice accurately and in the center a knob for adjusting the shock-proof detector.

This last is all-important, for there are signs that an exasperated public might turn on currents of unexpected power that would smash all machines unprovided with a shock-proof crystal.

IN VIEW of the difficulties which the problem of the national minorities is causing to so many states, both new and old, Switzerland sets a reassuring, example. Within its borders three languages have equal standing before the law— German, French, and Italian— The New Swiss President and three races make up its population. But though French is spoken by a majority in but five of the twenty-five cantons, the four highest political offices in the country are held this year by men from these five cantons. They are the presidency of the Confederation, the vice-presidency of the Federal Council, the presidency of the National Assembly, and the presidency of the Council of State.

In calling attention to this fact, the editor of the Journal de Genève, a leading organ published in French, warns against exaggerating the importance of these four posts. The Swiss manage their affairs without an excessive concentration of authority, either in a particular office or an individual person, which is a good proof of successful self-government; but the absence of national prejudice at a time when the feeling runs so high in so many other countries is particularly welcome. If the force of personality is given free play, the problem of national minorities will soon disappear. Burns may be revised to read: "The race is but the guinea's stamp; the man's the gowd for a' that."

At a time when the most irritating point in the rela-tions between Switzerland and its neighbors is the debate with France over the free zones about Geneva, the German-speaking majority could have been expected to select its own representatives as spokesmen for the country. As a matter of fact, the department of foreign affairs is in the hands of a former President of the Confederation, Giuseppe Motta, whose name indicates an Italian origin, so that the French negotiators cannot take personal umbrage at supposedly German sympathies. This is perhaps

By training and profession, M. Ernest Chuard, the new President, is a natural scientist and a teacher, rather than a politician. His honors in the political line have come to him unsought, His specialty is agricultural chemistry, and the tillers of the soil have in him a friend and a benefactor. Long a resident of Lausanne, he was first a teacher at the local gymnasium or high school, and later at the university. From 1906 to 1908 he was the President of the Federation of Agriculture, and became later a founder of the Swiss Peasants' Union. In 1907 he was elected to the National Assembly, and was later elevated to the Federal Council. Personally he is described as a modest man, preferring his laboratory to the political rostrum, and his advancement may be taken as another sign of the increasing political power of the agricultural classes observed in so many countries, both in Europe and America.

The new, Vice-President of the Federal Council, who may be expected to become President of the Confederation next year, and who has had a wide political experience, is Jean Musy of Fribourg. Of more aggressive type than M. Chuard, he has made a specialty of finances, as the former has of education and agriculture. The retiring President is Charles Scheurer, and he succeeded Dr. Robert Haab. Every year the Swiss elect a new head of their Confederation, and though his powers are limited, his position is one of honor that few political men disdain. Switzerland is one of the oldest self-governing states in the world, its independence dating from 1201, and though there is a tendency toward a greater centralization of power in the national administration, as there is in the United States, the individual cantons are jealous of their prerogatives. The taste for dictatorships does not extend to Switzerland

THE interesting disclosure is made by Commissioner Enright, head of the police department of New York City, that marked progress has been made in reducing, by 80 per cent, the number of places where liquor is illegally dispensed in his district. This has been accomplished despite the repeal of the state enforcement law, the lack of co-operation by his charges, of inspectors and other officials in his department whose duty it is to enforce the law. Coming closely upon the heels of the action instituted by the Mayor of Philadelphia, the activity in New York is indicative of a determination to wipe out, in the larger cities of the eastern section of the United States, the apparent conspiracies which have made flagrant violations of the Eighteenth Amendment possible.

One fact seems to have been established. It is that no large city can afford to countenance the continued yiolation of the law within its jurisdiction. The existence of the saloon, whether licensed or unlicensed, is a constant menace to society. It has no place in the economic scheme which the American people have adopted and which public sentiment approves, whatever may be said to the contrary. Commissioner Enright will find, probably. that opposition to his crusade against the alleged official conspirators will not come from the public, but from those politicians, high and low, who, in opposition to popular sentiment, brought about, through connivance and intimidation, the repeal of the New York State enforcement code. The dignified and so-called respectable champions of this form of nullification are the citizens affiliated with the Association Against the Prohibition Amendment, the Modification League, the Constitutional Liberty League, the faction of the American Federation of Labor for which Samuel Gompers speaks, and the other organizations openly or secretly financed by former liquor manufacturers and dealers, and the conscienceless profiteers who have lined their pockets with money gained from the modern bootlegging industry.

WHEN the Boston Authors' Club placed a tablet in the vicinity of the house in Boston where Edgar Allan

Edgar

Allan

Poe

Poe was born, it was doing all that can now be done outwardly to repair a long neglect. In this tardiness of recognition Boston has been only a little slower than some other parts of the United States, and the fact that Poe's native city was merely the temporary residence of his parents has rendered the geographical fact of less significance. He himself, in that pride cherished by all Americans of Revolutionary forbears, valued his southern arcestry, and David Poe, the patriot grandfather, esteemed and honored by Lafayette, was a worthy link with the Norman-English Le Poers from whom he counted his descent.

Memorials to Poe have not been entirely lacking. The beautiful and authentic Zolnay bust, in the library of the University of Virginia, speaks the truth about his appearance, if the testimony of some who knew him can be accepted, and the tragic little cottage at Fordham isnow kept as a museum. But his best monument is that which was visioned by the Tennessee poet, John H. Tabb, when he wrote his "Invidia Vindex":

A certain tyrant, to disgrace
The more a rebel's resting place,
Compelled his people, every one,
To hurl, in passing there, a stone.
This done, behold the pile became A monument to keep the name.

And thus it is with Edgar Poe: Each passing critic has his throw, Nor sees, defeating his intent, How lofty grows the monument.

It must always be something of a mystery that the apprehension of Poe's genius should have been so belated in his own country. He was acclaimed a poet among the French, the Germans, and the Spanish before his own countrymen + saving one or two-began to count him among their poets, much less to dream that he was among the greatest of any country. This was in part because he proffered them a gift of which few Americans at his time had felt the lack-even that pure art in poetry which has never appealed to the general. Bryant and the New England poets, of whom only one can be thought of as Poe's rival in this field of his art, were all writing within the traditional conventions, straight out of their education in English poetry. Here was a voice ringing out in the tones of no nationality or literature, but finding its sanctions in universal art. So he stands today in a sure, high place as a consummate artist, and a tablet more or less is a negligible matter so far as his fame is concerned. Yet it is valuable as an evidence of the awakeming art perception which prompts it, as an educating influence upon a generation which does itself honor in

Editorial Notes

THE TIMES of London propounded an interesting question in a recent issue, when it asked, "When does an ordinary elephant become a white elephant?" appears that the authorities of the London Zoo have felt for quite a while that "Luckhi" was more ornamental than useful and that she was becoming more and more of the "white" variety, morally even if not materially. Hence the offer of a new home for her was gladly accepted and in due time she was coaxed into a huge case for removal. But all the efforts of all the men and of a petrol winch failed to shift it out of the elephant yard; until at last another elephant, "Indarini;" came to the rescue and butted and pushed it out. Thereafter, however, the trip was uneventful, and it is to be hoped that "Luckhi" will keep her natural color in her new WITHOUT intending to rub it in, one is still justified in calling attention to the fact that latest news reports are to the effect that the twelve-hour day has been practically abolished in the steel industry. It may be recalled that those in authority long claimed that the change wasvirtually impossible, or that, if it was made, it would involve so great an increase of expenses that the necessary adjustments would never be tolerated. But all the same, here it is, and just as in the case of prohibition, presumably either the claims were exaggerated, or else the impossible has been accomplished.

A Dance on the Cliffs of Moher

Dublin, Dec. 31 (Special Correspondence)—We arrived at the Cliffs of Moher in a soaking mist, having twice lost our way and struggled with the horse and cart from sea-level to 600 or 700 feet in a matter of three miles. A man cutting hay on the approach to the Cliffs, told us, in the stubborn music of Clare speech, that we might camp beyond his field, where there was a hollow in the hillside but 100 yards from the cliff edge. It was a gray, wild, melancholy spot, inclosed by dripping gray walls, and on one side were some ruined buildings, gaunt and overgrown with grasses. These ruins had once been the stables of the O'Briens, a family which, 100 years previously, had occupied the ruined castle, which was standing at the very edge of the cliff. All that night the wind pushed at our soaking canvas and drove the ghostly mist into the hollow. I looked out of the tent at about two in the morning, and could hear the gasping of the sea, 500 or 600 feet below; the fog was stealing about—why does it move about so noiselessly?—one felt it should be wailing. Moher! There is gray melancholy in the name.

In the morning the fog had swept downwards, and when we looked toward Liscannor Bay we found it was hidden by clouds. We walked up to the cliff edge, and saw the sea, hundreds of feet below, green and stealthily crawling in, and powdering into foam on what appeared, from the great height, to be a pebbled shore. From the top the height of the Cliffs was breathless and the air biting, as though the cold arm of the mist was still on it. As I crawled along one of the ledges the wind would suddenly veer round a corner and roar in my ears. All around, like flecks of foam on the air, the sea gulls were turning and crying. By a steep path, and after a long detour and hair-raising scrambles, it was possible to get down to the foot of the cliffs, and then one was overwhelmed by their stupendous height, sheer, uprising slate, torn and furrowed by the storms.

We returned to our hollow, and, later on, a shepherd came down from the hills, and after a sideways shake of the head-for they do not nod up and down in Clare—and a toneless. "soft day." or "fine day," sat on a wall and stared at us for about half an hour.' So our acquaintance began and strengthened; and in the evening he returned, and supped with us, his thin blue eyes staring in front of him all the time. He talked about the O'Briens and the grand horses they had in the stables, which had all gone to ruin. Then, seeing a chance of a little exercise for his imagination, he described the supernatural happenings of the neighborhood—the tale of the overturned hay-cart, and the headless horse, and the phantom coach, none of which he had seen himself, although it was Michael Byrne, the fiddler, who had seen it all with his own eyes. And, by way of parting comfort, he said that no tent would keep up more than one night on the cliffs, for the hollow was the home of the whirlwinds.

/ Now Michael Byrne, the fiddler, sounded interesting, and we could not resist the idea of getting him to come up to the hollow after he had finished his haymaking, bringing some of the local youths with him to dance reels, half-sets and jigs. The lads came up after dark, but no Michael, and so a halfset was started without fiddler or piper, the orchestral effect being supplied by a youth ironically known as "Captain" How he managed to distort his mouth and regulate his breath while he sang out variations on the theme, "Dryumptideedle-ididdlety, dryumptideedladidum," while the excited lads bounded from their corners to the center of the ring, changed partners, scuffled back, stamped, and then moved on to the next corner, I cannot imagine.

By this time we had lighted candles, and then word came up from the village that Michael Byrne had another engagement, but he had sent up his son with a tin whistle. Then, to the plaintive liquid notes of the tin whistle the half-set started again, this time stamping, charging, bounding up and down savagely, but in wonderful time. Jigs followed, and more half-sets, and always the quick, rich notes of the whistle, now deep and persuasive, now excitingly high, now as liquid as a blackbird's whistle. Then there was that final note, short, high, and unexpected, as though it were trying to trick the dancers. It never succeeded; the final "calumph" (as Lewis Carroll would have said) of those elephantine feet came not a second behind the music, sharp as the "crack of doom."

Then Denny O'Brien, the red-haired, fell into a thorn hush, and declared himself "destroyed entirely Bourke had the breath "druv out of him," and "Captain Kelly" had his knife "lost on him"-but it was soon found againand everyone was tired. So "Captain Kelly," being the musical man, was asked to sing a song, but was shy and tried to put it on to Paddy, who refused. There was an awkward silence, and at last "Captain Kelly" repented, and sang twelve verses (and choruses) about Nancy Hogan's goose-a vain bird which was arrested by the "polis" and charged with all sorts of misdemeanors by a vindictive gander. Then Denny, stirred by the style of "Captain Kelly," sang ten verses (and choruses) about a lady whose "name was Eliza and she had big feet," which was greatly applauded.

By this Paddy Bourke could hold himself in no longer, and got up and sang a plaintive chant about "Dring for his own County Clare," and delivering his "own dear country" from the hand of the tyrant. Paddy's voice was thin, and like a girl's, and by the final and fifteenth verse he almost squeaked with emotion, and the audience came very near to tears. The situation was saved by three cheeky bars on the tin whistle, and immediately the couples sorted themselves out again and began to pound away at another half-set. It was after midnight and the fog had begun to step down the hills when the dancers went away, singing and shouting. Every now and then the piper would break into a bar or two; then there would be a shout of laughter, which would startle the standing cattle on the hills. Often now, when I am alone and am hiding among my memories, I suddenly think I hear the "horns of elf-land"—the shrill crescendo of the whistle, that low, persuasive note, and the thumping of feet; and I think of the fiddler of Dooney:

When I play on my fiddle in Dooney Folk dance like a wave of the sea,and of the Cliffs of Moher. V. S. P.

When Tales Are Well Told

Books there are without end. And some of them are good, and many are scarcely passing fair, and a very few are truly great. But when it comes to fiction, Christopher Morley declares, in the Bookman, "that the first requisite of good fiction, I suppose, is to tell a tale; to carry a reader along in a current of narrative; to keep him eager to know what happens. The second desideratum, perhaps, is to tell the tale in such a way that it seems set in an eddy, or vibration, of a much larger meaning than is immediately apparent. The story must not merely turn on its own axis, but also move in some, perhaps unreckoned, orbit in a wider dimension."
